10강 1번 소재: 완벽주의적인 운동 선수들에 대한 개입

● When you work with perfectionistic athletes, one challenge is that the athletes, once determined to work on their perfectionism, are very likely to try to be "the perfect client" during the intervention. ● Thus, from the therapist/consultant's view it is important to be aware of subtle warning signs, such as if the intervention seems to run too smoothly and the athlete seems to be capable of carrying out exercises you agreed on a little bit too well. ● In these situations you yourself might very well feel like the "best therapist ever" because you are unknowingly being reinforced by the athlete's apparent success. ● It is, however, important that you do not allow yourself to be deceived by the athlete. ● At this point, not only have you failed to help the athlete, you may have actually begun to reinforce the perfectionistic behaviors you should actually be working on. ● Maintaining a dialog with the athlete about their progress and continually exploring their goals within the intervention is therefore crucial. ● In many cases, it can even be considered progress if the athlete "fails" to some extent in completing the homework assignment. ● This is because it provides an opportunity to discuss failure.

When you work with perfectionistic athletes, one challenge is that the athletes, once determined to work on their perfectionism, are very likely to try to be "the perfect client" during the intervention. Thus, from the therapist/consultant's view it is important to be aware of subtle/obvious warning signs, such as if the intervention seems to run too smooth/smoothly and the athlete seems to be capable of carrying out exercises you agreed on a little bit too well. In these situations you yourself might very well feel like the "best therapist ever" because you are unknowingly being reinforced by the athlete's apparent success. It is, however, important that you do not allow yourself to be deceived by the athlete. At this point, not only you have/have you failed to help the athlete, you may have actually begun to reinforce the perfectionistic behaviors you should actually be working on. Maintaining a dialog with the athlete about their progress/regression and continually exploring their goals within the intervention is therefore crucial. In many cases, it can even be considered progress if the athlete "fails" to some extent in completing the homework assignment. This is because it provides an opportunity to discuss failure.

A large repertoire and proficient song performance can only be acquired by an individual bird that grew up in a secure nest, was subsequently unencumbered by disease and parasites, and in possession of sharp faculties, memory capacity, foraging ability, and predator watchfulness — engaged in hundreds of hours of successful singing practice. Whatever ① assists the post-hatching growth of a bird's system of song practice, and whatever keeps the bird from attending to and practicing song is later evident as deficits in the size and perfection of its mature song repertoire. This makes a large repertoire of complex song a direct causal reflection of an individual's ② successful passage through a demanding and varied obstacle course. The more demanding the performance to be acquired, the ③ more comprehensive a measure of an individual's personal history and qualities lies implicit in the perfected, mature song performance. An individual's song proficiency tells its audience, in a way ④ impossible to counterfeit, that the singer comes from, as it were, "a good background." Potentially, one can do well to take a singer's background seriously.

The ocean is ① important as a surface, as a channel for travel. As anyone who has jumped into the ocean knows, seawater is buoyant — it supports your weight much better than the air around you. It is no surprise, therefore, that four-fifths of international trade in goods depends on sea freight. The ④ emergency of enormous container ships has meant that fewer and fewer people now work in shipping, but it remains very big business — the biggest ocean industry of all in terms of total income. Every day, ⑤ huge quantities of goods pass through major bottlenecks like the Panama and Suez Canals. The world was given a stark reminder of the importance of these bottlenecks in March 2021, when one of the world's largest container ships, the Ever Given, blocked the Suez Canal for six days. ⑥ prompting widespread concern about the consequences for world trade.

When the new coronavirus arrived in the United States in January 2020, it hit an economy, society, and constitutional democracy fundamentally unprepared. As the scale of the challenge became clear, the country simply could not deliver what was needed to confront it. There was a solution, one identified by scholars and policy experts as early as the middle of March and publicly disseminated by the middle of April. That solution was a large-scale program of rapid testing of patients, tracing and testing their contacts, and tracing and testing their contacts again in turn. Such testing also needed _____ from a culture of sticking to universal precautions such as mask-wearing, hand and bathroom hygiene, and robust practices of infection control. The massive, rapid buildup of such a public health campaign, as well as the necessary systems and services to support it, would have interrupted transmission of the virus sufficiently to eliminate it even while keeping the economy open. But the country did not have the relevant infrastructure ready to go and was not able to deliver this mobilization.

① 여러분이 완벽주의적인 운동선수들과 함께 일할 때, 하나의 난제는 운동선수들은 일단 그들의 완벽주의 해결을 위해 노력하고 자 굳게 결심하고 나면, 개입 [치료] 기간 동안 ‘완벽한 의뢰인’이 되려고 노력할 가능성이 매우 크다는 것이다. ② 따라서 치료사/상담사의 관점에서는, 미묘한 경고 징후, 가령 개입이 너무 순조롭게 진행되는 것 같지는 않은지, 그리고 운동선수가 여러분이 동의한 과제를 약간 너무 잘 수행할 능력이 있는 것 같지는 않은지를 인식하는 것이 중요하다. ③ 이러한 상황에서는 여러분 스스로가 ‘역대 최고의 치료사’인 것처럼 느끼는 것도 전혀 무리가 아닌데, 그것은 여러분이 자신도 모르게 그 운동선수의 걸로 보이는 성공으로 강화되고 있기 때문이다. ④ 하지만 여러분이 스스로 그 운동선수에게 속지 않도록 하는 것이 중요하다. ⑤ 이 시점에서 여러분은 그 운동선수를 돕지 못했을 뿐만 아니라, 여러분이 실제로 해결을 위해 노력해야 할 (그 선수의) 완벽주의적인 행동을 실제로 강화하기 시작했을지도 모른다. ⑥ 선수와 그의 진전 상황에 관한 대화를 유지하고 개입 과정 내에서 끊임없이 그의 목표를 탐색하는 것이 따라서 중요하다. ⑦ 많은 경우에 선수가 과제를 완료하는 데 어느 정도 ‘실패한다’면 그것은 심지어 진전인 것으로 여겨질 수 있다. ⑧ 이는 그것이 실패를 논할 기회를 제공하기 때문이다.

① One of the ideas many scientists take as an ethical principle is that scientists should remain, like journalists, “objective” and not take sides on policy controversies. ② Indeed, historically, scientists such as the late astronomer Carl Sagan who appear to have become “too” public have risked losing the respect of other scientists. ③ Under normal circumstances, some scientists might reasonably choose to avoid (as scientists) championing specific policy solutions, even on something like climate, lest they be mistaken for self-appointed (or media-appointed) authorities over what society should do. ④ But scientists are also citizens, who may also reasonably choose to speak out, as citizens, on policy issues. ⑤ To avoid involvement altogether can itself be seen as irresponsible. ⑥ Scientists have the same rights and duties as other citizens, including the right and the duty to give thought to public issues and, on appropriate occasions, to take positions on them. ⑦ For a climate scientist not to support appropriate action on climate might be likened to a medical doctor’s not supporting routine cancer screening or prenatal nutrition initiatives.

① Different listeners will have different interpretations. ② On hearing Brahms's Fourth Symphony, Elisabeth von Herzogenberg (among his closest friends, whose opinion he valued) wrote to say: ③ "It is a walk through exquisite scenery at sunset, when the colours deepen and the crimson glows to purple." ④ Her response is even more interesting juxtaposed with that of Richard Strauss, who "received an unforgettable impression of the new Brahms Symphony, the Andante of which 'reminded him of a funeral procession moving in silence across moonlit heights.'" ⑤ It doesn't matter that the same movement evoked "moonlight" for Strauss and "sunset" for Herzogenberg. ⑥ Moonlight and sunset may not be the same, but they have aspects in common, both invoking heavenly bodies, both striving for expression beyond words, and it is the similarities that tell us more about the music than the differences. ⑦ The music could never, for instance, characterize a chase or a battle or a cartoon. ⑧ If someone were to offer such an interpretation he would be subject to suspicion himself.

① 듣는 사람이 다르면 해석도 달라질 것이다. ② 브람스의 교향곡 4번을 듣자마자, (브람스가 의견을 존중하는 그의 가장 가까운 친구 가운데 한 사람인) Elisabeth von Herzogenberg는 다음과 같이 썼다. ③ "그것은 해질 녘에 더없이 아름다운 경치 속으로 들어가는 산책인데, 그 시간에는 색이 짙어지고 진홍빛이 타올라 자줏빛이 된다." ④ 그녀의 반응은 Richard Strauss의 반응과 나란히 놓일 때 훨씬 더 흥미로운데, 그는 "그 새로운 브람스 교향곡에 대한 잊을 수 없는 인상을 받았는데, 그것의 안단테 악장은 '그에게 달빛이 비치는 고원을 가로질러 고요히 이동하는 장례 행렬을 생각나게 했다.'" ⑤ 같은 악장이 Strauss에게는 '달빛'을, Herzogenberg에게는 '일몰'을 불러일으켰다는 것은 중요하지 않다. ⑥ 달빛과 일몰이 똑같지 않을지는 모르나, 둘 다 천체를 상기시키고 둘 다 말로 나타낼 수 없는 표현을 추구하면서 공통적인 면을 가지고 있는데, 우리에게 그 차이점보다 음악에 대해 더 많은 것을 말해 주는 것은 바로 그 유사점이다. ⑦ 예를 들어, 그 음악은 결코 추격이나, 전투나, 만화의 특징을 나타낼 수는 없을 것이다. ⑧ 만약 누군가 그런 해석을 내놓는다면 그 자신이 의심을 면하기 힘들 것이다.

When you work with perfectionistic athletes, one challenge is that the athletes, once determined to work on their perfectionism, are very likely to try to be “the perfect client” during the intervention. Thus, from the therapist/consultant’s view it is important to be aware of subtle warning signs, such as if the intervention seems to run too smoothly and the athlete seems to be capable of carrying out exercises you agreed on a little bit too well. In these situations you yourself might very well feel like the “best therapist ever” because you are unknowingly being reinforced by the athlete’s apparent success. It is, however, important that you do not allow yourself to _____. At this point, not only have you failed to help the athlete, you may have actually begun to reinforce the perfectionistic behaviors you should actually be working on. Maintaining a dialog with the athlete about their progress and continually exploring their goals within the intervention is therefore crucial. In many cases, it can even be considered progress if the athlete “fails” to some extent in completing the homework assignment. This is because it provides an opportunity to discuss failure.

- ① reveal your client’s secrets
- ② be disappointed by the results
- ③ be deceived by the athlete
- ④ slow down your counseling pace
- ⑤ doubt about your client’s response

One of the ideas many scientists take as an ethical principle is that scientists should remain, like journalists, “objective” and not take sides on policy controversies. Indeed, historically, scientists such as the late astronomer Carl Sagan who appear to have become “too” public have risked losing the respect of other scientists. Under normal circumstances, some scientists might reasonably choose to avoid (as scientists) championing specific policy solutions, even on something like climate, lest they be mistaken for self-appointed (or media-appointed) authorities over what society should do. But scientists are also citizens, who may also reasonably choose to speak out, as citizens, on policy issues. To avoid involvement altogether can itself be seen as irresponsible. Scientists have the same rights and duties as other citizens, including the right and the duty to give thought to public issues and, on appropriate occasions, to take positions on them. For a climate scientist not to support appropriate action on climate might be likened to a medical doctor’s not supporting routine cancer screening or prenatal nutrition initiatives.

- ④ Scientists might lose the respect of other scientists if they are involved in political championing.
- ⑤ Scientists cannot easily avoid speaking out on policy issues but they should be careful not to be involved.

In a study conducted by Griskevicius and his colleagues on behavioural cues, university students read a short story about a successful university graduate who obtained a high-status first job and was, relative to others, promoted quickly. Students in the control group read a neutral story of similar length. In subsequent experimental tasks, students could choose between different green and non-green hypothetical consumer products (car, household cleaner, dishwasher). Each time the products were equal in price, but the non-green product was more luxurious and had better performance than the green product, which was pro-environmental. Perhaps the variable found in research to distinguish entrepreneurs from others is self-efficacy — individuals' belief that they can successfully accomplish whatever they set out to accomplish. This is one reason why, despite the odds being highly stacked against them, many start new ventures: they believe that they can effectively complete the tasks needed to make these companies a success. Thus, self-efficacy is one characteristic that helps entrepreneurs get started and also persist in their efforts to succeed. Self-efficacy, however, has a downside. It may lead individuals to undertake tasks for which, in reality, they lack the required resources, leading to what can be disastrous results. In a sense, they have chosen to play in a game they cannot win, with negative results virtually guaranteed. These negative effects can be magnified by a high level of optimism — a general, and often unjustified belief that ultimately all will turn out well. In combination, high levels of optimism and high levels of self-efficacy can prove deadly for entrepreneurs with limited resources.

During her last year of community college, Krista worked as a full-time nanny to take care of Delia's four kids. Krista was the first person in her family to go to college and felt pressure all around, especially as her long days became consumed by her job as well as writing assignments for her classes. These, along with some other things to take care of, were a real (a) struggle for Krista.

Delia, Krista's boss at the time, had her own struggles. Just before Krista began working for her family, Delia's career in law enforcement was cut short when she'd broken her hip at work. Krista marveled at her attitude. She had endured surgery to replace her hip and was left with metal in her leg — rods that would remain in her bones forever. But nothing stopped her. She remained (b) positive, day in and day out. One day when Delia saw Krista struggling with school and writing and general life pressures, she explained how she coped. She told her that the only thing Krista could do was to take "one day at a time."

Delia's attitude made (c) little sense to Krista. She wanted to deal with everything all at once, but that just made her stress even worse. Delia's one-day-at-a-time motto seemed nice in theory but impossible in reality. As the days and weeks of the year melted by, Delia listened to Krista as Krista shared about life and how she was working through it. After a year with Delia's family, Krista transferred to Ridge University and her job ended. Krista and Delia stayed in touch, but Krista lived a few hours away on campus so they didn't see each other very often.

One day, after a tense situation with one of the girls who lived in her dorm, Krista found herself overcome with major (d) anxiety. She took a deep breath, looked at herself in the mirror, and said, "It's okay, Krista. Just get through today." Krista shocked herself, because it was the first time she truly believed that she could (e) give up one day at a time. That is a gift Krista has carried with her over all the years since then. She's so thankful for Delia's words.

Do bacteria speak? Do they use sound to communicate with one another just as they use chemicals to send information from one cell to another? Given that communication among cells is one of the fundamental activities of bacteria, sound would at first seem a likely means of communication. Bacteria are social beings. They live in films and clusters that are so tightly woven that they are often invulnerable to chemical and physical attacks that easily kill solitary cells. Bacterial success depends on networked teamwork and, at the genetic and biochemical levels, bacteria are constantly exchanging molecules. But to date, there are no documented examples of sonic signaling among bacteria, although their increased growth rates when exposed to the sounds of their own kind may be a form of eavesdropping. Sonic communication may be ill-suited to bacterial societies. They live at a scale so tiny that molecules can zip from one cell to another in a fraction of a second. Bacteria use tens of thousands of molecules within their cells, an extensive, complex, and ready-made language. For them, chemical communication may be cheaper, faster, and more nuanced than sound waves.

In general, two approaches to learning have been distinguished — a surface approach and a deep approach to learning. A student with a surface approach to learning sees the work or task as an unwelcome external imposition, a hurdle they want to clear with as little time and effort as possible. One of the most common strategies for the surface approach is rote learning content without _____, in order to subsequently reproduce the material. Students with a deep approach to learning, on the other hand, have the intention of comprehending the material, and activating conceptual analysis. Learning strategies that characterize a deep approach to learning can vary in terms of the characteristics and requirements of the task. Possible strategies are reflecting, discussing, using various information sources, relating ideas to previous knowledge, looking for patterns, checking evidence, and critically examining arguments.

So many of our feelings can be made so much easier to manage, and perhaps more fun to experience, just by saying them aloud and letting them build a bridge between us and another person. Exposing our fears makes them much less frightening; affirming our triumphs makes them much more real; revealing our grief relieves us of carrying the burden completely alone. A compassionate and empathetic friend, much like a therapist, can give us and our emotions a foundation to cling to. It's the reason that merely having someone listen can be such a powerful experience, even if that person was secretly paying more attention to the cheerleaders at the halftime show. All jokes about therapists' fees aside, it is no shame that part of their ability to help lies in just being there, in the moment and attuned — those nods can be meaningful. A quality friend understands this and runs with it, knowing just how to validate their buddy's emotional state — whether that state stems from a hard-won personal triumph or just a particularly arduous commute home.

When you work with perfectionistic athletes, one challenge is that the athletes, once determined to work on their perfectionism, are very likely to try to be “the perfect client” during the intervention. Thus, from the therapist/consultant’s view it is important to be aware of subtle warning signs, such as if the intervention seems to run too smoothly and the athlete seems to be capable of carrying out exercises you agreed on a little bit too well. In these situations you yourself might very well feel like the “best therapist ever” because you are unknowingly being reinforced by the athlete’s apparent success. It is, however, important that you do not allow yourself to be deceived by the athlete. At this point, 여러분은 그 운동 선수를 돕지 못했을 뿐만 아니라, 여러분이 실제로 해결을 위해 노력해야 할 (그 선수의) 완벽주의적인 행동을 실제로 강화하기 시작했을지도 모른다. Maintaining a dialog with the athlete about their progress and continually exploring their goals within the intervention is therefore crucial. In many cases, it can even be considered progress if the athlete “fails” to some extent in completing the homework assignment. This is because it provides an opportunity to discuss failure.

One of the ideas many scientists take as an ethical principle is that scientists should remain, like journalists, “objective” and not take sides on policy controversies. Indeed, historically, scientists such as the late astronomer Carl Sagan who appear to have become “too” public have risked losing the respect of other scientists. Under normal circumstances, some scientists might reasonably choose to avoid (as scientists) championing specific policy solutions, even on something like climate, 그들은 사회가 무엇을 해야 하는지에 대해 자기 혼자 정한 권위자로 오인되지 않도록. But scientists are also citizens, who may also reasonably choose to speak out, as citizens, on policy issues. To avoid involvement altogether can itself be seen as irresponsible. Scientists have the same rights and duties as other citizens, including the right and the duty to give thought to public issues and, on appropriate occasions, to take positions on them. For a climate scientist not to support appropriate action on climate might be likened to a medical doctor’s not supporting routine cancer screening or prenatal nutrition initiatives.

In a study (A) conducting by Griskevicius and his colleagues on behavioural cues, university students read a short story about a successful university graduate who obtained a high-status first job and was, relative to others, promoted quickly. Students in the control group read a neutral story of similar length. In subsequent experimental tasks, students could choose between different green and non-green hypothetical consumer products (car, household cleaner, dishwasher). Each time the products were equal in price, but the non-green product was more luxurious and had better performance than the green product, (B) in which was pro-environmental. The study showed that, in the treatment group, in which an _____ of status motives occurred, 55 per cent chose the green car; in the control group, 37 per cent chose the green car. Perhaps the variable found in research to distinguish entrepreneurs from others is self-efficacy — individuals belief that they can ① successfully accomplish whatever they set out to accomplish. This is one reason why, despite the odds being highly stacked against them, many start new ventures: they ② believe that they can effectively complete the tasks needed to make these companies a success. 따라서 자기 효능감은 사업가가 시작하고 또한 성공하기 위한 노력을 지속할 수 있도록 돕는 하나의 특징이다. Self-efficacy, however, has a downside. It may lead individuals to undertake tasks for which, in reality, they lack the required resources, leading to what can be ③ fortunate results. In a sense, they have chosen to play in a game they cannot win, with negative results virtually ④ guaranteed. These negative effects can be magnified by a high level of optimism — a general, and often ⑤ unjustified belief that ultimately all will turn out well. In combination, high levels of optimism and high levels of self-efficacy can prove deadly for entrepreneurs with limited resources.

① While her last year of community college, Krista worked as a full-time nanny to take care of Delia's four kids. Krista was the first person in her family to go to college and felt pressure all around, especially as her long days became consumed by her job as well as writing assignments for her classes. These, along with some other things to take care of, ② were a real struggle for Krista.

Delia, Krista's boss at the time, had her own struggles. Just before Krista began working for her family, Delia's career in law enforcement was cut short when she'd broken her hip at work. Krista marveled at her attitude. She had endured surgery to replace her hip and was left with metal in her leg — rods that would remain in her bones forever. But nothing stopped her. She remained positive, day in and day out. One day when Delia saw Krista ③ struggled with school and writing and general life pressures, she explained how she coped. She told her that the only thing Krista could do was to take "one day at a time."

Delia's attitude made little sense to Krista. She wanted to deal with everything all at once, but that just made her stress even worse. Delia's one-day-at-a-time motto seemed nice in theory but ④ impossible in reality. As the days and weeks of the year melted by, Delia listened to Krista as Krista shared about life and how she was working through it. After a year with Delia's family, Krista transferred to Ridge University and her job ended. Krista and Delia stayed in touch, but Krista lived a few hours away on campus so they didn't see each other very often.

One day, after a tense situation with one of the girls who lived in her dorm, Krista found ⑤ herself overcome with major anxiety. She took a deep breath, looked at herself in the mirror, and ⑥ saying, "It's okay, Krista. Just get through today." Krista shocked herself, because it was the first time she truly believed that she could survive one day at a time. That is a gift Krista has carried with her over all the years since then. She's so thankful for Delia's words.

Do bacteria speak? Do they use sound to communicate with one another just as they use chemicals to send information from one cell to another? Given that communication among cells is one of the fundamental activities of bacteria, sound would at first seem a likely means of communication. Bacteria are ① social beings. They live in films and clusters that are so tightly woven that they are often ② vulnerable to chemical and physical attacks that easily kill solitary cells. Bacterial success depends on networked teamwork and, at the genetic and biochemical levels, bacteria are constantly ③ exchanging molecules. But to date, there are no documented examples of sonic signaling among bacteria, although their increased growth rates when exposed to the sounds of their own kind may be a form of eavesdropping. Sonic communication may be ④ ill-suited to bacterial societies. They live at a scale so ⑤ tiny that molecules can zip from one cell to another in a fraction of a second. Different listeners will have different interpretations. ① On hearing Brahms's Fourth Symphony, Elisabeth von Herzogenberg (among his closest friends, whose opinion he valued) wrote to say: "It is a walk through exquisite scenery at sunset, when the colours deepen and the crimson glows to purple." Her response is even more interesting juxtaposed with ② Richard Strauss, who "received an unforgettable impression of the new Brahms Symphony, the Andante of which reminded him of a funeral procession ③ moving in silence across moonlit heights." It doesn't matter ④ that the same movement evoked "moonlight" for Strauss and "sunset" for Herzogenberg. Moonlight and sunset may not be the same, but they have aspects in common, both invoking heavenly bodies, both striving for expression beyond words, and it is the _____ that tell us more about the music than the differences. So many of our feelings can be made so much easier to manage, and perhaps more fun to experience, just by saying them aloud and letting them build a bridge between us and another person. Exposing our fears makes them much less frightening; affirming our triumphs makes them much more real; revealing our grief relieves us of carrying the burden completely alone. A compassionate and empathetic friend, much like a therapist, can give us and our emotions a foundation to cling to. 단지 어떤 사람에게 이야기를 들려주는 것만으로도 매우 강력한 경험이 될 수 있다는 것이 그 이유이다, even if that person was secretly paying more attention to the cheerleaders at the halftime show. All jokes about therapists' fees aside, it is no shame that part of their ability to help lies in just being there, in the moment and attuned — those nods can be meaningful. To understand connection regrets, let me tell you the story of two women. In the late 1980s, Cheryl attended Drake University in Des Moines, ① where she became fast friends with Jen. Cheryl and Jen belonged to the same sorority and lived in a house with about forty other women. Among the group, these two stood out for their seriousness and ambition. Cheryl became president of the sorority; Jen was elected president of the entire student body. They supported each other's enthusiasms and aspirations.

Shortly after graduation in 1990, Jen married — Cheryl was a bridesmaid — and moved to Virginia. And shortly after that, Jen invited Cheryl to visit her at her new home. Jen said that she wanted Cheryl to meet a friend of Jen's husband, who ② she thought might be a good romantic match. Cheryl was taken aback. She'd been dating another Drake student for two years. The ocean is important as a surface, as a channel for travel. As anyone who has jumped into the ocean knows, seawater is buoyant — it supports your weight much better than the air around you. ① It is no surprise, therefore, that four-fifths of international trade in goods depends on sea freight. ② The emergence of enormous container ships has meant that fewer and fewer people now work in shipping, but it remains very big business — the biggest ocean industry of all in terms of total income. ③ Despite this fact, the main disadvantage of sea freight transportation might be the time it takes to get cargo from one location to the next. ④ Every day, huge quantities of goods pass through major bottlenecks like the Panama and Suez Canals. ⑤ The world was given a stark reminder of the importance of these bottlenecks in March 2021, when one of the world's largest container ships, the Ever Given, blocked the Suez Canal for six days, prompting widespread concern about the consequences for world trade.

The only way to produce crystal-clear writing is to know how a reader will respond to the choices you make in composing text and graphics. You need to know which sentence structures are most easily understood, which organization of material into sections is most easily followed, and so on. It's certainly possible to offer some general rules along these lines: for example, "use the active voice," "divide the paper into Introduction, Methods, Results, and Discussion sections," and "use a figure instead of a table when quantities are to be compared." In principle, you could tape a long list of such rules above your computer and treat it as the voice of authority on how to reach readers. But long lists of rules are boring. Besides, using them makes writing mechanical, and good writing sometimes entails knowing when to bend the rules instead of following them. Furthermore, using a list of rules is oddly indirect: instead of relying on rules you've been told will produce clear text, surely it would be more effective to understand how readers think, and write to that understanding.

This works pretty well, but when crops of acorns fluctuate dramatically across years, it can send shock waves through the animal community.

Masting is the synchronized production of large crops of acorns across a broad geographic range of a species, alternating with one or more years of little or no acorn production. (①) This is an adaption to increase acorn survival and dispersibility. (②) Populations of some specialist seed consumers crash following non-mast years so that more acorns survive following the mast years. Early one morning the doorbell rang. “How can I help you?” Vera asked the child who was standing there. “My mother is ill. She needs some medicine, he said. “Who’s your mom?” Vera asked. “Charity,” he answered. Charity was the woman who cleaned their house each week. Vera’s mom came to talk to Washington, Charity’s son, “(a) I will take you home and we can take some medicine to her.”

(B)

Washington asked Vera’s mom to stop outside a run-down house. The house was neat and clean. Faded red linoleum covered the floor and pictures cut from magazines were pasted against the walls. A small stove stood in the front room, and in front of it was a table and three old chairs. Charity was in the bedroom. She coughed when she greeted them. Recent advances in electronic media and computer networks have allowed the creation of large and distributed repositories of information. However, the immediate availability of extensive resources for use by broad classes of computer users gives rise to new challenges in everyday life.

- (B) One of these requirements is the incorporation into the software systems of mechanisms that help their users when they face difficulties during human-computer interaction sessions or lack the knowledge to make decisions by themselves.
- (C) These challenges arise from the fact that users cannot exploit available resources effectively when the amount of information requires prohibitively long user time spent on acquaintance with and comprehension of the information content. Thus, the risk of information overload of users imposes new requirements on the software systems that handle the information.

South Asian and Confucian nations are among the tightest whereas Latin American and Eastern European nations are the least tight. Tightness is associated with strong norms and low tolerance of deviant behavior, which restricts the range of behavior deemed appropriate across everyday situations and settings. By contrast, looseness is associated with weak norms and high tolerance of deviant behavior, affording a wider range of permissible behavior across everyday situations. The strength (or weakness) of everyday recurring situations within nations simultaneously reflects and supports the degree of order and coordination in the larger cultural context. Compared to individuals in loose cultures, individuals in tight cultures are more concerned with conforming to normative rules and have psychological qualities that promote social order.

When the new coronavirus arrived in the United States in January 2020, it hit an economy, society, and constitutional democracy fundamentally unprepared. As the scale of the challenge became clear, the country simply could not deliver what was needed to confront it. There was a solution, one identified by scholars and policy experts as early as the middle of March and publicly disseminated by the middle of April. That solution was a large-scale program of rapid testing of patients, tracing and testing their contacts, and tracing and testing their contacts again in turn. Such testing also needed _____ from a culture of sticking to universal precautions such as mask-wearing, hand and bathroom hygiene, and robust practices of infection control. The massive, rapid buildup of such a public health campaign, as well as the necessary systems and services to support it, would have interrupted transmission of the virus sufficiently to eliminate it even while keeping the economy open. But the country did not have the relevant infrastructure ready to go and was not able to deliver this mobilization.

The only way to produce crystal-clear writing is to know how a reader will respond to the choices you make in composing text and graphics. You need to know which sentence structures are most easily understood, which organization of material into sections is most easily followed, and so on. It's certainly possible to offer some general rules along these lines: for example, "use the active voice," "divide the paper into Introduction, Methods, Results, and Discussion sections," and "use a figure instead of a table when quantities are to be compared." In principle, you could tape a long list of such rules above your computer and treat it as the voice of authority on how to reach readers. But long lists of rules are boring. Besides, using them makes writing mechanical, and good writing sometimes entails knowing when to bend the rules instead of following them. Furthermore, using a list of rules is oddly indirect: 여러분이 명료한 텍스트를 만들어 낼 것이라고 들었던 규칙에 의존하는 것 대신에, surely it would be more effective to understand how readers think, and write to that understanding.

The house was neat and clean. Faded red linoleum covered the floor and pictures cut from magazines were pasted against the walls. A small stove stood in the front room, and in front of it was a table and three old chairs. Charity was in the bedroom. She coughed when she greeted them. Vera’s mom gave her some medicine and put a carrier bag ④ filling with groceries onto the table. Recent advances in electronic media and computer networks have ① allowed the creation of large and distributed repositories of information. However, the immediate availability of ② limited resources for use by broad classes of computer users gives rise to new challenges in everyday life. These challenges arise from the fact that users cannot exploit ③ available resources effectively when the amount of information requires prohibitively long user time spent on acquaintance with and comprehension of the information content. Trade deregulation has brought down barriers to the movement of capital and jobs, but it has not freed up movement of people in pursuit of a better livelihood. The result is that work is allowed to circulate around the globe with impunity, but workers ① themselves are not — in fact, many are criminalized if they cross borders. From the time that dogs evolved from wolves, they have developed numerous behavioral traits that have supported and enhanced their interactions with humans. Science is now discovering that dogs seem to have more advanced (A) skills than previously thought, skills that have helped them coexist with humans. For example, it was once believed that dogs were not capable of understanding verbal communication but rather relied on their advanced nonverbal abilities to help them understand human gestures and behavior. However, Andies and Miklosi reported in Science that research now suggests that some dogs may be capable of recognizing more than 1,000 words. This capability is definitely an asset in their interactions with humans. Furthermore, research by Udell and Vonholdt suggests that one of the biggest transformations of dogs in the process of domestication from the wolf may be due to two genes (GTF2I and GTF2IDI). My father was an Air Force master sergeant ① stationed in Ohio. My father even bought me a brand-new baseball just in case I ran into him. I could hardly contain myself on the drive to Cincinnati. We arrived at the stadium a few minutes before the players were due to take the field, and I lined up with other fans at the entrance to the Pirates locker room to see the players. As the players came out to enter the runway to the dugout, I looked anxiously for Roy Face. I finally saw him ② coming and in my best manners asked him for his autograph.

Roy Face's spot on my hero list had just been filled by one of the greatest players in the game. It was three days before Christmas. My sister Sherry and I were so excited. Every time another commercial came on TV, we ran to our lengthy Christmas list and added another toy or game. Finally Mom had enough, and she sat us down and gave us “the speech.” She asked us if we had considered anyone ❶ besides/despite ourselves. “Did either of you buy a gift for your little brother, your grandmother or your father?” she asked. I felt ❷ humble/ashamed. Sherry and I made a list of our family, pooled our meager ❸ allowance/assignment, and walked to the dollar store. At home we wrapped and labeled each gift, chatting and laughing together. Our French poodle, Jacques, was right up under us the whole time. Finally Sherry and I looked down, really noticing him for the first time. “The dog!” we exclaimed together. We had forgotten to put the dog on our Christmas list. “What do you think he would like?” I asked Sherry. “What about a bone?” she whispered with her hand to her mouth so Jacques wouldn’t hear. Out we went again to the meat market to get a bone. We wrapped this gift and placed the bone under the tree. The next day as we piled into the car for church, we noticed our damp, drippy dog standing in the rain. “Can’t we let him into the warm house?” I begged. “He has a doghouse,” Mom reminded us, but we could tell she thought he was pitiful too. “Pleeeeeaaaaaase,” we begged together. “OK.” Mom caved in. Sherry hurried to ❹ redo/undo his chain and lead him in the front door. A few hours later, when we got home, we didn’t expect the scene that greeted us. I stood in the front doorway and gasped. There was ripped gift paper scattered all over the living room floor. Sherry and I rushed to the tree to count the presents. It looked as if all of them were still there. Mom looked for the dog. “Come and see,” she shouted. Jacques was ❺ crouched/shrugged under a bed busily chewing his bone. We couldn’t believe it. He had opened only one present... his present. How did he know which one to open? “He must have read the gift tag and knew it was his!” I exclaimed. Our dog could read! Our dog was the smartest dog I’d ever heard of. I started planning TV shows for him. Maybe we could get him on America’s Funniest Home Videos or Good Morning America because our dog could read! Mom waited ❻ till/over after Christmas to break the news. It was quite a blow when she told me, “You know, he probably just smelled the bone.” I felt as ❼ deflated/inflated as last year’s birthday balloons. I guess there will be no America’s Funniest Home Videos prize in our future. But still, I think there will never be a Christmas to beat that one. I still smile when I think that for two whole days I was sure we owned the smartest dog on earth.

Perhaps one of the greatest challenges is to find the will, the courage, and the undefeatable attitude to persist. To challenge oneself to exceed the comfort zone and to push beyond one's self-perceived outer limits is to practice with firm faith and devotion. Reaching beyond anything done previously, always knocking on that door of a new record, a farther reach than ever reached before — what Daniel Coyle called “reachfulness” — is what “peaking” involves. Reachfulness is the constant pounding in one's head to stretch and stretch to that new limit, no matter how minuscule. It is a new high. The role of the teacher, coach, or mentor is to keep tipping the learner forward from passivity toward reachable action. It is a continuous cycle that maintains and sustains skillfulness, yet also scores a plus within the learner for the new mark that has been reached. This requires constant dissatisfaction with the current specs or data and a yearning to do one's personal best, each and every outing. It is exhausting on the one hand, and on the other it is thrilling and truly invigorated by the tiny, barely noticeable successes that keep the learner moving ever forward.

However, this turned out not to be the case: this is the 'Peto's paradox', which gets its name from a study published in 1995 by Richard Peto and his colleagues. A large repertoire and proficient song performance can only be acquired by an individual bird that grew up in a secure nest, was subsequently unencumbered by disease and parasites, and — in possession of sharp faculties, memory capacity, foraging ability, and predator watchfulness — engaged in hundreds of hours of successful singing practice. Whatever ① assists the post-hatching growth of a bird's system of song nuclei, and whatever keeps the bird from attending to and practicing song is later evident as deficits in the size and perfection of its mature song repertoire. This makes a large repertoire of complex song a direct causal reflection of an individual's ② successful passage through a demanding and varied obstacle course. The more demanding the performance to be acquired, the ③ more comprehensive a measure of an individual's personal history and qualities lies implicit in the perfected, mature song performance. On the other hand, slow thinking and thorough investigation are necessary to tackle complex business problems but the reflection process might create delays in decision-making and frustrate action.

Are you Othello or Hamlet? Are you more likely to think — and act — too fast, or to get mired in analysis paralysis? (①) While jumping to conclusions and actions is a widespread fault in individuals, analysis paralysis is frequent in large, bureaucratic organizations that pile up studies and reports before taking any action or no action at all. (②) On the one hand, being fast or lazy in our thinking allows us to economize on scarce and expensive mental resources, but the resulting solutions are often poor and ineffective. (③) For organizations and institutions to be both effective and efficient, they need people who can overcome these challenges to solving complex business problems. (④) These people must be as thorough as Hamlet and as action oriented as Othello, without jumping to conclusions like the latter or being stuck in a loop of endless questioning like the former. (⑤) Conventional wisdom suggests these people should be chosen for their intelligence, experience, and expertise, but these qualities might not be enough: a systematic problem-solving method is also necessary.

One day in the spring of 2011, San Francisco resident Tina Case finally agreed to allow her daughter Danielle to acquire a dog of her own if she promised to take care of it, and saved up the money necessary in order to bring one home. After receiving her permission, Danielle got busy, knocking on neighbors' doors to offer (a) her pet- and babysitting services.

(B)

Danielle came to investigate what (b) her beloved dog was so intent on investigating, and to her great surprise, she found a nest full of wild baby rabbits, (c) She rushed them to a neighbor who was also a vet, who diligently checked them over. After a thorough examination and clean bill of health, the baby rabbits were returned to the Case family along with instructions on how to care for them. Danielle and her mom were prepared to take care of the baby rabbits themselves, but then Koa stepped in to help care for and nurture her discoveries.

(C)

It was an unusual situation, because many breeds of dogs would rather chase rabbits than nuzzle them, but she was determined to protect them. After some initial hesitation, Tina Case decided to allow the dog to exercise her maternal instincts. "Koa has never been a mother, so she thinks these are her little puppies," (d) she said. "They hop all over her and always find their way to the crook of her leg and find warmth and shelter."

Once (e) she had saved up enough money, off she went to pick out a suitable dog. She found Koa, a golden retriever, who quickly settled into her new home. Koa set her mind to becoming an integral part of the family, offering companionship to the Cases who in turn provided her with plenty of opportunity to pursue more doggy pursuits. Soon Koa's favorite activity became chasing lizards in the backyard, and to Danielle's relief, the dog always let the reptiles go after providing them with a little bit of exercise. One day, Koa was on her usual lizard hunt when she became obsessed with exploring a raised spot of dirt alongside the house.

With the rise of the Internet, particularly in the light of on-line auctions, it is easier for customers to establish the lowest price of any product. In order to be meaningful, the claim concerning wholeness and coherence must have a cognitive function, which may be related to economy of time as well as to the communication itself.

- (A) Although entertainment and the passing of time are products of the cognitive content, the reader often regards reading primarily as a way of passing the time and not as cognition. Consequently, independent of coherence and relevance, he is ready to accept every aspect of the work that makes time pass in an agreeable or at least meaningful way.
- (B) We crave logical coherence and relevance because we do not want to waste time on something that is unnecessary. However, fictional literature leaves room for other priorities, for we read not only to receive information but also for entertainment or to pass the time.
- (C) Irrelevant elements take up valuable time and disturb comprehension, as the reader assumes at the outset that they have a function and tries to interpret the whole in such a way that they fit in. It is a convention of non-fiction to contain only relevant elements, and traditional views of literature have transferred this convention to literary fiction.

Ten years ago, when search engines were powered by data mining (rather than by machine learning), if a person searched for “gourmet restaurants,” then for “clothing,” his or her search for the latter would be independent of his or her search for the former. ① Both times, a search engine would collect as much information as possible, then provide the inquirer options — something like a digital phone book or catalog of a subject. ② But contemporary search engines are guided by models informed by observed human behavior. ③ What search engines often do once they have collected information about a user’s habits is to create a profile of them, which helps the search engine decide which ads to target that user with. ④ If a person searches for “gourmet restaurants,” then searches for “clothing,” he or she may be presented with designer clothing rather than more affordable alternatives. ⑤ Designer clothing may be what the searcher is after. But there is a difference between choosing from a range of options and taking an action — in this case, making a purchase; in other cases, adopting a political or philosophical position or ideology — without ever knowing what the initial range of possibilities or implications was, entrusting a machine to preemptively shape the options.

Almost all species have some mechanism for exploratory movement — and the longest of these movements are often vital for the longterm survival of populations, for a whole suite of reasons. In the absence of long-distance dispersal, populations will invariably become threatened by inbreeding, as local gene pools become more and more impoverished over time through the lack of mixing with individuals elsewhere. Dispersal can also be essential in allowing populations to persist when environmental conditions change, or when population densities within a local area grow to the point that competition for resources limits survival chances.

With the rise of the Internet, particularly in the light of on-line auctions, it is easier for customers to establish the lowest price of any product. However, the destabilizing effect this has on prices affects commodities more than brands. Indeed, it is interesting to note that it is the major brand leading organizations who have embraced e-commerce, not just to reduce transaction costs, but also to create added values for customers. For example, the travel specialists at Thomas Cook have used the Internet to make it easier for customers to contact them using whatever medium suits them best. This is a far cry from the traditional approach of viewing the customer as a passive entity to absorb whatever the supplier decides to do to them. Indeed, in the electronic age, given that customers today have as much information about suppliers as they have about them, the most powerful brands will be customer-centric. Successful companies will know the customer and will be the customer's advocate.

In order to be meaningful, the claim concerning wholeness and coherence must have a cognitive function, which may be related to ① economy of time as well as to the communication itself. Irrelevant elements take up valuable time and ② disturb comprehension, as the reader assumes at the outset that they have a function and tries to interpret the whole in such a way that they fit in. It is a convention of ③ fiction to contain only relevant elements, and traditional views of literature have transferred this convention to literary fiction. We crave logical coherence and relevance because we do not want to waste time on something that is unnecessary. However, fictional literature ④ leaves room for other priorities, for we read not only to receive information but also for entertainment or to pass the time. Although entertainment and the passing of time are products of the cognitive content, the reader often regards reading primarily as a way of passing the time and not as cognition. Throughout nature, the process of natural selection seldom favours organisms that lack the capacity to disperse to new areas. ① Even among sedentary plants, evolution has found ways for species to spread from one place to another, ‘hitchhiking’ on animals or using the wind to scatter their seeds and pollen. ② Almost all species have some mechanism for exploratory movement — and the longest of these movements are often vital for the long-term survival of populations, for a whole suite of reasons. ③ In the absence of long-distance dispersal, populations will invariably become threatened by inbreeding, as local gene pools become more and more impoverished over time through the lack of mixing with individuals elsewhere. ④ However, an increase in distance in seed dispersal does not always translate into benefits for plant recruitment, and even when it does, the relationship can be quite complex. ⑤ Dispersal can also be essential in allowing populations to persist when environmental conditions change, or when population densities within a local area grow to the point that competition for resources limits survival chances.

Perhaps one of the greatest challenges is to find the will, the courage, and the undefeatable attitude to persist. To challenge oneself to exceed the comfort zone and to push beyond one's self-perceived outer limits is to practice with firm faith and devotion. Reaching beyond anything done previously, always knocking on that door of a new record, a farther reach than ever reached before — what Daniel Coyle called “reachfulness” — (A) be what “peaking” involves. Reachfulness is the constant pounding in one's head to stretch and stretch to that new limit, no matter how minuscule. It is a continuous cycle that maintains and sustains skillfulness, yet also (B) scored a plus within the learner for the new mark that has been reached. Every time that a cell multiplies, there ① is risk of an error at the time when the DNA is copied. However, this turned out not to be the case as large dimensions and longer life do not ③ necessary mean increased risk of cancer: this is the ‘Peto’s paradox’, which gets its name from a study published in 1995 by Richard Peto and his colleagues. A large repertoire and proficient song performance can only be acquired by an individual bird that grew up in a secure nest, was subsequently unencumbered by disease and parasites, and — in possession of sharp faculties, memory capacity, foraging ability, and predator watchfulness — engaged in hundreds of hours of successful singing practice. Whatever impairs the post-hatching growth of a bird's system of song nuclei, and whatever keeps the bird from attending to and practicing song is later evident as deficits in the size and perfection of its mature song repertoire. This makes a large repertoire of complex song a direct causal reflection of an individual's successful passage through a demanding and varied obstacle course. The more demanding the performance to be acquired, the more comprehensive a measure of an individual's personal history and qualities lies implicit in the perfected, mature song performance. An individual's song proficiency tells its audience, in a way impossible to counterfeit, that the singer comes from, as it were, "a good background." Are you Othello or Hamlet? Are you more likely to think — and act — too fast, or to get mired in analysis paralysis? While jumping to conclusions and actions is a widespread fault in individuals, analysis paralysis is frequent in large, bureaucratic organizations that pile up studies and reports before taking any action or no action at all. On the one hand, being fast or lazy in our thinking allows us to economize on scarce and expensive mental resources, but the resulting solutions are often poor and ineffective. On the other hand, slow thinking and thorough investigation are necessary to tackle complex business problems but the reflection process might create delays in decision-making and frustrate action. For organizations and institutions to be both effective and efficient, they need people who can overcome these challenges to solving complex business problems. It was three days before Christmas. My sister Sherry and I were so excited. Every time another commercial came on TV, we ran to our lengthy Christmas list and added another toy or game. Finally Mom had enough, and she sat us down and gave us “the speech.” She asked us if we ① had considered anyone besides ourselves. “Did either of you buy a gift for your little brother, your grandmother or your father?” she asked. I felt ashamed. Sherry and I made a list of our family, pooled our meager allowance, and walked to the dollar store. At home we wrapped and labeled each gift, chatting and laughing together. Our French poodle, Jacques, was right up under us the whole time.

Finally Sherry and I looked down, really noticing him for the first time. “The dog!” we exclaimed together. We had forgotten to put the dog on our Christmas list. “What do you think he would like?” I asked Sherry. “What about a bone?” she whispered with her hand to her mouth so Jacques wouldn’t hear. Out we went again to the meat market to get a bone. We wrapped this gift and placed the bone under the tree. The next day as we piled into the car for church, we noticed our damp, drippy dog ② standing in the rain. “Can’t we let him into the warm house?” I begged. “He has a doghouse,” Mom reminded us, but we could tell she thought he was pitiful too. “Pleeeeeeaaaaase,” we begged together.

“OK.” Mom caved in. Sherry hurried to undo his chain and lead him in the front door. A few hours later, when we got home, we didn’t expect the scene that greeted us. I stood in the front doorway and gasped. There was ripped gift paper ③ scattering all over the living room floor. Sherry and I rushed to the tree to count the presents. It looked as if all of them were still there. Mom looked for the dog. “Come and see,” she shouted. Jacques was crouched under a bed busily chewing his bone. We couldn’t believe it. He had opened only one present... his present. How did he know which one

Our dog could read! Our dog was the smartest dog I’d ever heard of. I started planning TV shows for him. 정답 및 해설 p.23

① Like in the early days of industrialization, workers today are no longer reaping the gains of progress. ② Worse, many have been left behind in the backwaters of progress. ③ In the same way that opportunity dried up for middle-income artisans as a consequence of the industrialization process, the age of automation has meant diminishing opportunities for the American middle class. ④ Like the victims of the early factories, many Americans have adjusted to the computerization of work by unwillingly shifting into lower-paying jobs or have failed to adjust and dropped out of the workforce completely. ⑤ And similar to the victims of the factories, the losers to automation have primarily been men in the prime of life. ⑥ Up until the 1980s, manufacturing jobs allowed ordinary working men to attain a middle-class lifestyle without going to college. ⑦ As employment opportunities in manufacturing receded, a path of upward mobility was closed to many citizens.

① 산업화 초기처럼, 오늘날의 노동자들은 더 이상 진보의 이익을 거두지 못하고 있다. ② 더욱 심각한 것은, 많은 이들이 진보의 변두리에 남겨진 채로 있어 왔다는 것이다. ③ 산업화 과정의 결과로 중간 소득 계층의 장인에게 기회가 고갈된 것과 같은 방식으로, 자동화의 시대는 미국 중산층에게 기회감소를 의미했다. ④ 초기 공장의 희생자들처럼 많은 미국인들은 마지못해 저임금 직업으로 옮겨 노동의 컴퓨터화에 적응하거나 적응에 실패하여 노동 인구에서 완전히 탈락하였다. ⑤ 그리고 공장의 희생자들과 비슷하게, 자동화의 패배자들은 주로 인생의 전성기에 있는 남성들이었다. ⑥ 1980년대까지만 해도 제조업은 평범한 직장인들이 대학에 가지 않고도 중산층 생활을 이룰 수 있도록 했다. ⑦ 제조업의 고용 기회가 줄어들면서, 많은 시민들에게 상향 이동의 길이 막혔다.

① Imagination often seems unbounded and without constraint. ② However, if this were the case then it would be more likely to generate falsehoods than truths. ③ Imagination must be constrained in order to provide knowledge. ④ On the other hand, if we want to generate any new knowledge, what we imagine cannot be entirely “up to us,” as it must go beyond what we already know. ⑤ The knowledge-generating capacity of the imagination can be explained by suggesting that some constraints on the imagination are fixed and within our control, allowing for exploratory activity within these constraints. ⑥ For example, if one wants to know whether a sofa will fit through a door, one must constrain one’s imagination to keep the relevant shapes and sizes and the laws of physics fixed, while allowing for exploration of various possible ways of manipulating the sofa.

① 상상력은 흔히 무한하고 제약이 없는 것처럼 ‘보인다’. ② 하지만, 만약 이것이 사실이라면, 그렇다면 그것은 진실보다 거짓말을 만들어 낼 가능성이 ‘더’ 클 것이다. ③ 지식을 제공하려면 상상력이 제한되어야 한다. ④ 반면에, 만약 우리가 어떤 새로운 지식을 생성하고 싶다면, 우리가 상상하는 것은 그것이 우리가 이미 알고 있는 것을 넘어서야 하기 때문에 전적으로 ‘우리에게만 달려’ 있을 수는 없다. ⑤ 상상력의 지식 생성 능력은 상상력에 대한 몇 가지 제약이 고정되어 있고 우리가 통제할 수 있는 범위 내에 있으므로 이러한 제약 내에서 탐색적 활동을 허용한다고 말함으로써 설명될 수 있다. ⑥ 예를 들어, 소파가 문을 통과할 수 있는지 알고 싶다면, 소파를 조작하는 여러 가지 가능한 방법의 탐색을 허용하면서도 관련된 모양과 크기 및 물리학 법칙을 고정시켜 두기 위하여 우리의 상상력을 제한해야 한다.

① It is interesting to reflect on the possible connection between increasing individualism and rising mental ill-health. ② This is discussed at length in Oliver James's book Affluenza, in which he points out that the United States, the world's most individualist society, is also on the top of the league for mental disorders (as recorded by the World Health Organization's World Mental Health Survey). ③ Several other countries that rate highly on individualism also figure highly in this league table. ④ Comparing just 14 countries, including New Zealand (2nd), France (4th) and the Netherlands (7th), James defines 'affluenza' as 'the placing of a high value on money, possessions, appearances (physical and social) and fame', and he attributes this to what he calls 'selfish capitalism'. ⑤ It could certainly be argued that the relative importance attached to materialistic factors related to self-esteem is particularly important in cultures where 'selfish capitalism' is strong.

① 증가하는 개인주의와 늘어나는 정신 질환 사이에 있을 수도 있는 연관성에 관해 생각해 보는 것은 흥미롭다. ② 이는 Oliver James의 저서 *Affluenza*에서 상세히 다루어지는데, 여기에서 그는 세계에서 가장 개인주의적인 사회인 미국이 (세계보건기구의 세계정신건강조사에 의해 기록된 바와 같이) 정신 질환의 범주에서도 최고라는 점을 지적한다. ③ 개인주의가 높다고 평가되는 몇몇 다른 나라들 또한 이 비교 일람표에서 높게 나타난다. ④ 뉴질랜드(2위), 프랑스(4위), 그리고 네덜란드(7위)를 포함하여 정확히 14개국을 비교해 본 뒤에, James는 '부자병'을 '돈, 소유물, (신체적·사회적) 외양과 평판에 높은 가치를 두는 것'으로 정의하며, 이것을 자신이 '이기적 자본주의'라고 부르는 것 때문으로 여긴다. ⑤ '이기적 자본주의'가 강한 문화에서는 자존감과 관련된 물질적 요소에 부여되는 상대적 중요성이 특히 중요하다고 확실히 주장할 수 있을 것이다.

① 기본 예절은 우리가 간과하는 경향이 있는 근본적으로 중요한 사회 현상의 범주에 꼭 들어맞는다. ② 내가 캘리포니아에서 밴쿠버로 이사했을 때 가장 먼저 나에게 특별한 인상을 준 것 중 하나는 그곳 주민들이 뒷문으로 공공 버스에서 내릴 때 버스 기사에게 항상 크고 쾌활하게 '감사합니다!'라고 외친 것이었다. ③ 처음에는 다소 과하다는 느낌이 들었지만, 그 이후로 나는 그것을 근본적으로 더 유쾌한 주민들의 말투일 뿐만 아니라 아마도 더 즐거운 사람들을 만들어 내는 데 도움이 되는 의식으로도 보게 되었다. ④ 버스 기사는, 그녀가 깨닫든 그렇지 않든, 감사를 받아 더 기분이 좋아서, 이제 친절하게 운전하거나 늦게 도착하는 사람이 버스에 탈 수 있도록 조금 더 정류장에 머무르고 싶어 하는 생각이 더 든다. ⑤ 이 행동은 비가 많이 오는 우리 도시 전역에 미묘한 파장으로 파문처럼 퍼져서, 바람이 풀 위로 불어가는 것처럼 사람들의 마음을 선으로 기울게 한다.

① ‘마음 읽기’는 심리 상태가 다른 사람에게 있다고 생각하는[다른 사람의 심리 상태를 파악하는] 인지 능력을 일컫는다. ② 그것은 ‘사회 인지’와는 뚜렷이 다른데, 사회 인지는 ‘우리가 사회적 세상을 항해하는 것을 용이하게 하는 인지 구조’라는 더 넓은 지시 대상 기반을 가지고 있다. ③ 사회 인지는 마음 읽기보다 더 넓은 범주인데, 심리 상태가 다른 사람들에게 있다고 생각하지 않고 그들과 성공적으로 상호 작용하는 것이 가능하기 때문이다. ④ 우리는 다른 사람의 행동을 일으킨 심리 상태를 전혀 생각하지 않고 그 사람의 행동에 반응함으로써 그 사람과 완전히 성공적인 사회적 상호 작용을 할 수도 있을 것이다. ⑤ 그 대신에, 우리가 특정 상황에서, 예를 들어 횡단보도에서나 버스를 타기 위해 줄을 서서 기다릴 때, 어떻게 행동해야 하는지에 대한 사회적 관습을 토대로, 우리는 다른 사람의 행동을 예상할 수도 있을 것이다. ⑥ 그러한 사회적 관습은 서로 다른 역할을 하는 사람들이 어떻게 행동하리라고 우리가 기대하느냐에까지, 예를 들어 버스 운전사와 동승객에게 우리가 기대하는 행동에까지 확장된다. ⑦ 이것들은 모두, 명백히 다른 사람들의 심리적 상태에 대한 추론을 수반하지 않는, 다른 사람들과 상호 작용하는 사례들이다.

① 자유 의지의 문제는 우리의 자기 이해, 우리의 대인 관계, 그리고 도덕적, 법적 관행에 현실적인 영향을 미친다. ② 우리가 자유 의지를 갖고 있다고 상정하는 것은 우리의 많은 일상적 태도와 판단에 대한 정당화 뒤에 잠재해 있다. ③ 예를 들어, 누군가 우리를 도덕적으로 부당하게 취급할 때, 우리는 분개와 도덕적 분노를 경험할 뿐만 아니라 우리가 그렇게 할 때 ‘정당화된다’고 보통 느끼는데, 왜냐하면 우리는 변명이 되는 어떤 여건도 없을 때, 사람들이 자유롭게 자신이 하는 일에 도덕적으로 책임이 있으며, 그러므로 그런 반응의 적절한 대상이라고 상정하기 때문이다. ④ 우리는 또한 개인들이 ‘자기 자신의 자유 의지에 따라 행동할’ 때, 자신이 하는 일에 대해 도덕적으로 책임이 있으므로, 자기 행동에 대해 칭찬과 비난, 처벌과 보상을 ‘마땅히 받을 만하다’고 보통 상정한다. ⑤ 비슷한 상정이 형사법에서 이뤄진다. ⑥ 예를 들어, 미국 연방 대법원은 “우리 법체계에서, 그리고 특히 형벌, 선고, 감금에 대한 우리의 접근에서, ‘보편적이고 지속적인’ 토대는 ‘인간 의지의 자유가 있고 그에 따라 평범한 개인에게 선과 악 중에서 선택할 능력과 의무가 있다는 믿음’이다”라고 단언했다.

① An aeronautical engineer who sets about the task of developing a new airplane will start by performing theoretical analyses involving thrust, lift, and drag. ② Next, she will build models and run experiments. ③ And most important, as the plane is built, its components will be assembled, adjusted, and tested while the plane is safely on the ground. ④ Evolution has no such luxury. ⑤ As a species evolves it always has to be done “in flight.” ⑥ Every sequential modification has to be fully functional and competitive. ⑦ The neuroscientist David Linden has described the human brain as the progressive accumulation of evolutionary kludges, or quick-and-dirty fixes. ⑧ During brain evolution, new structures were placed on top of the older functional structures, leading to redundancy, waste of resources, unnecessary complexity, and sometimes competing solutions to the same problem. ⑨ Furthermore, as new computational requirements emerged, they had to be implemented with the current hardware. ⑩ There is no switching from analog to digital along the way.

To illustrate the connection between thought and feeling, consider a soft drink dispenser in a self-service restaurant. Our particular model has a row of labeled buttons at the top and spouts underneath that dispense the desired beverage if the corresponding button ❶ _____ (push). In our case, the buttons represent our interpretations — Wrong, Unfortunate, Terrible, Right and Shameful (or “I am wrong”). Should I, in any given situation, ❷ _____ (arrive) at the interpretation that something is wrong and consequently push the soda fountain button for “I am wrong,” then the machine would ideally dispense the corresponding beverage, namely anger.

As long as I have awareness of pushing a certain button, the buttons are labeled correctly and they are properly connected to the corresponding beverage container, the machine will function without a hitch. Unfortunately, most of us ❸ _____ (be) unaware of the connections between interpretations on the mental level and our corresponding reactions on the emotional level, however. Because of this, we often behave like people who continuously push buttons on a soda machine and watch in desperation as the cup ❹ _____ (overflow). We do not notice that we are pushing the button since we are completely unaware of its existence. ① 언젠가 나는 Ben Gurion 공항에 앉아서 내 비행편이 방송으로 공지되기를 기다리고 있었다.

⑫ 그녀가 이어서 자신의 이야기를 쏟아 내기 시작했기에, 나는 그녀가 내 눈에서 진정한 공감을 보았다고 생각한다. ⑬ 비교적 어렸던 그녀의 여동생이 자신의 남편을 잃은 지 얼마 되지 않았고, 이 여자는 자신의 여동생이 기댈 수 있는 바위가 되어 주며 그 주를 보냈었다. ⑭ 그녀는 떠나는 지금에서야, 그런 공공장소에서 억제하지 못하고 가슴이 미어지게 소리 내어 울 정도로, 여동생에 대한 슬픔의 홍수가 밀려들도록 두었던 것이었다.

⑮ 그녀는 단지 몇 분 동안 나에게 말을 했지만, 나는 그녀가 조금 위안을 받고 나와 헤어진다고 느꼈는데, 왜냐하면 다른 누군가가 그녀에게 아주 잠깐이라도 관심을 보이고 그녀의 평소 역할과는 반대로 그녀가 기대어 울 수 있는 어깨를 제공했기 때문이었다. ⑯ 나는 자주 거절(받는 것)을 두려워하고 아무도 내가 그들을 특별히 위로하기를 원하지 않을 것이라고 추정한다. ⑰ 하지만 그것은 사실이 아닌데, 진실한 감정이 있는 곳에서, 잡을 수 있는 따뜻한 손, 고통을 비추는 공감하는 눈, 그리고 기대어 울 수 있는 어깨는 아무리 충분해도 지나치지 않은 것이다.

I looked around and realized that a woman sitting a few rows in front of me was weeping loudly. I was a little thrown and did not know what to do. Should I allow her privacy? Should I approach her? I guess she saw the genuine empathy in my eyes, as she proceeded to pour out her story. I was working through college selling children's books door to door in Florida. One particularly blistering day nothing was going right. I had knocked on every door without a single answer; I was hot, tired, and felt like a total failure.

- (A) Then, I looked down the street at a small white house and was drawn toward it. I had barely knocked on the door when an older woman opened it and immediately asked me in. She gave me a drink and invited me to share a meal with her and her husband. It was obvious that they did not have much money.
- (B) As I left, the man gave me money and said he just wanted to help me out and that he had no need for my books. As I walked back down the street I broke into tears and kept crying for blocks. These people who at first seemed to have so little had given me more than I could ever have asked for.

It's probably worth mentioning that Socrates was put to death for his beliefs — and for spreading those beliefs too widely to the youth of Athens. So it's safe to say that challenging established thinking doesn't always sit well with people. But I'd argue it's not only a good idea to harness constructive conflict, it's critical to the decision-making process. You can't effectively set a strategy or decide direction if you're unwilling to grapple with tough questions and have some disagreement over ideas. Thoughtful leaders thrive on disagreement because it gives them the information they need to improve their ideas before they reach the world. We all have our own personal threshold of comfort around conflict. Some people thrive on lively debate; others find it deeply stressful. But if the boss can't be challenged safely, then no one can. I believe it's your job as a leader _____. By constructively harnessing disagreements within your team, you improve ideas and fuel productivity.

Antiracist educator and author Debby Irving uses an often-cited headwinds and tailwinds metaphor to explain the invisibility of the systemic, group-level differences that treat different groups of people differently. Headwinds are the challenges — some big, some small, some visible, some invisible — that make life harder for some people, but not for all people. When you run against a headwind, your speed slows down and you have to push harder. You can feel the headwind. When you have a tailwind pushing you, it is a force that propels you forward. It is consequential but easily unnoticed or forgotten. In fact, if you are like me when I jog with a tailwind, you may glow with pride at your great running time that day, as if it were your own athletic prowess. When you have the tailwind, you will not notice that some runners are running into headwinds. They may be running as hard as, or even harder than, you, but they will appear lazier and slower to you. When some of them grow tired and stop trying, they will appear self-destructive to you.

Like in the early days of industrialization, workers today are no longer reaping the gains of progress. Worse, many have been left behind in the backwaters of progress. In the same way that opportunity dried up for middle-income artisans as a consequence of the industrialization process, the age of automation has meant diminishing opportunities for the American middle class. ① Like the victims of the early factories, many Americans have adjusted to the computerization of work by unwillingly shifting into lower-paying jobs or have failed to adjust and dropped out of the workforce completely. ② The computerization of work has been an important basis for the growth of the postindustrial, knowledge-based economy. ③ And similar to the victims of the factories, the losers to automation have primarily been men in the prime of life. ④ Up until the 1980s, manufacturing jobs allowed ordinary working men to attain a middle-class lifestyle without going to college. ⑤ As employment opportunities in manufacturing receded, a path of upward mobility was closed to many citizens.

Change the Stor, Change the Future, Korten proclaims in his book on creating more sustainable and just earth economies.

We do not have an environmental problem so much as we have a story problem. Or so says David Korten, who argues that the grave environmental challenges we face today have been set in motion by the predominating cultural lens of what he calls the “sacred money and markets story.” This has been a story with catastrophic outcomes, contends Korten. (①) Is there a way to fix it? (②) Korten thinks there is: intervene. (③) Intervening in the “sacred money and markets story” and supplanting it with the “sacred life and living earth story” as the prevailing story of our time, he argues, will result in changing the human cognition and behavior that got us into our current environmental mess. (④) Change the story, and we will climb our way out of destruction and despair and begin the repair and recovery of life systems on the planet. (⑤) Permit the dominant “sacred money and markets story” instead to proceed on its current trajectory uninterrupted, with no effective intervention, and we seal our own doom.

Imagination often seems unbounded and without constraint. However, if this (A) were / had been the case then it would be more likely to generate falsehoods than truths. Imagination must be constrained in order to provide knowledge. On the other hand, if we want to generate any new knowledge, what we imagine cannot be entirely “up to us,” as it must go beyond what we already know. The knowledge-generating capacity of the imagination can be explained by suggesting (B) that / whether some constraints on the imagination are fixed and within our control, allowing for exploratory activity within these constraints. For example, if one wants to know whether a sofa will fit through a door, one must constrain one’s imagination to keep the relevant shapes and sizes and the laws of physics (C) fixing / fixed, while allowing for exploration of various possible ways of manipulating the sofa.

Zhang Heng에 관한 다음 글의 내용과 일치하는 것은?

Zhang Heng was born in Henan, China in 78 CE. In his youth, he traveled to Chang'an and Luoyang to receive his education. Zhang Heng showed an early aptitude for literary pursuits and achieved fame for his poetry in his 20s. His work To Live in Seclusion is considered a masterpiece of the late Han dynasty. While most educated young men in China at the time sought to obtain government posts, Zhang Heng spent many years learning mathematics and astronomy instead. His accomplishments in these fields are extremely noteworthy and rival his literary fame. He was able to create an accurate chart of the stars, which assisted in keeping the imperial calendar accurate. He also invented a flying machine, which was able to leave the ground, though only for a few moments. In 132, he invented the first seismograph, which traced the direction of earthquakes and their seismic waves. It was only later in his life that Zhang Heng held a series of important government positions in the capital and remote regions, beginning in 116 and continuing until his death.

When we are young, we see our parents as people who always know the answers. That’s probably why as soon as we can think independently, around the ages of 4-5, we start asking a lot of questions. Parents try to answer these questions in a way that a young mind can comprehend. However, when it comes to learning lessons about money, our parents’ answers to these questions _____. Even worse, a passing comment about money in the kitchen or at the dinner table can have a lasting effect. For example, a common phrase used by parents in response to a child’s request for something is “No, we can’t afford that.” Think for a moment about how a young mind might interpret that. The message could be interpreted as “we don’t have enough money” or “there isn’t enough money.” These beliefs about money can lead to an entire life designed around making sure there is always enough money through an obsession around work. It could lead to someone feeling deprived and a propensity for overspending in adulthood to avoid the feeling of deprivation.

The idea that zebra stripes work to confuse predators while the zebra is in motion is a relatively early theory. This is a plausible possibility; zebras have the high-contrast patterning generally thought ① to promote dazzle effects, and as herd animals they might benefit from an interaction between dazzle effects and confusion effects created when targeting individuals in groups. They also have visually oriented lions and hyenas as their main predators, and as large animals that live in the open, they might find camouflaging via other mechanisms ② difficult. The motion dazzle hypothesis has been studied in zebras by modelling the motion signals created by moving zebra stripes. This analysis shows that zebra stripes create strong motion signals in directions other than the true direction of movement, supporting the hypothesis ③ that zebra stripes make movement processing difficult. While most recent work focuses on whether zebra stripes function as protection against biting insects rather than mammalian carnivores, this idea is not necessarily ④ mutually exclusive with the dazzle hypothesis. It is interesting to reflect on the possible connection between increasing individualism and rising mental ill-health. ① This is discussed at length in Oliver James's book Affluenza, in which he points out that the United States, the world's most individualist society, is also on the top of the league for mental disorders (as recorded by the World Health Organization's World Mental Health Survey). ② Several other countries that rate highly on individualism also figure highly in this league table. ③ Comparing just 14 countries, including New Zealand (2nd), France (4th) and the Netherlands (7th), James defines 'affluenza' as 'the placing of a high value on money, possessions, appearances (physical and social) and fame', and he attributes this to what he calls 'selfish capitalism'. ④ It could certainly be argued that the relative importance attached to materialistic factors related to self-esteem is particularly important in cultures where 'selfish capitalism' is strong. ⑤ Generally, people living in an affluent country tend to feel prouder, more confident, and less afraid than people in a poor country, but they are not necessarily more compassionate or loving.

Sensors are opening vast new windows on the cosmos. Thanks to the constant advance of sensors and effectors in the form of adaptive optics, discovery of extrasolar planets moved from science fiction to commonplace with breathtaking speed. In the near future, sensor advances will allow us to analyze exoplanetary atmospheres and look for signatures of civilization. The same trends will open new horizons for amateur astronomers, who will soon enjoy affordable technical means to match the Kepler space telescope in planet-finding skills. Sensors are thus as much about democratizing amateur science as the creation of ever more powerful instruments. The Kepler satellite imaged a field of 115°, or a mere 0.25 percent of the sky. Basic manners fit into the category of fundamentally important social phenomena we tend to overlook. When I moved to Vancouver from California, one of the first things that struck me was that the natives, when exiting public buses through the back door, always shouted out a loud and cheerful Thank you! to the bus driver. It initially struck me as a bit excessive, but I've since come to see it not only as an expression of a fundamentally more pleasant populace but also as a ritual that probably helps to create more pleasant people. The bus driver, whether she realizes it or not, feels better having been thanked; she is now more inclined to drive courteously, or to remain at the stop that extra second to allow someone running late to hop on the bus. This behavior ripples out across my rainy city in subtle waves, inclining people toward virtue like wind blowing over the grass.

It matters to us how things are. But how things are not can be equally important. It matters when something you want is not there. In a variety of circumstances, it matters that a drink is sugar-free. A migraine sufferer might want any pudding as long as it is not chocolate. Anyone with an allergy or intolerance will have a similar type of negative preference. It could matter to someone that a particular train does not stop in Wakefield, if they were planning to get off there. Bereavement matters too. When a loved one is no longer around, the feeling of their absence is profound. Some fear their own non-existence more than anything else. In other cases, things not being a certain way can be entirely mundane. Someone might regret not being six-feet tall or not being a better chess player. But some cases of what is not are of great, even cosmic importance. It matters enormously that the planet Earth is not closer to the sun than it is. It is likely that there would be no human life on the planet if it were.

‘Mindreading’ refers to the cognitive ability to attribute psychological states to other people. It is distinct from ‘social cognition’ which has the ① wider referent base of ‘the cognitive structures that facilitate our ability to navigate the social world’. Social cognition is a broader category than mindreading because it is ② possible to successfully interact with other people without attributing psychological states to them. One might have a perfectly successful social interaction with another by responding to their behaviours, without giving any thought to the psychological states that caused them. Alternatively, one might ③ anticipate the behaviours of another person based on social protocols about how one ought to behave in a particular situation, for example, at a pedestrian crossing or waiting in line to get on a bus. Such social protocols ④ extend to how we expect people in different roles to behave, for example, the behaviours we expect of a bus driver and a fellow passenger. The problem of free will has real-world implications for our self-understanding, our interpersonal relationships, and our moral and legal practices. The assumption that we have free will lurks behind the ① justification of many of our everyday attitudes and judgments. For instance, when someone morally wrongs us, not only do we experience resentment and moral anger; we typically feel that we are justified in doing so, since we assume that, absent any excusing conditions, people are free and morally responsible for what they do and are therefore ② appropriate targets for such responses. We also typically assume that when individuals “act of their own free will,” they justly ③ deserve to be praised and blamed, punished and rewarded for their actions since they are morally responsible for what they do. ④ Similar assumptions are made in the criminal law. The US Supreme Court, for instance, has asserted: “A ‘universal and persistent’ foundation stone in our system of law, and particularly in our approach to punishment, sentencing, and incarceration, is the ‘⑤ disbelief in freedom of the human will and a consequent ability and duty of the normal individual to choose between good and evil.’”

Self-presentation and/or impression management have been long identified as motivators for SNS use. Specific to image sharing, Facebook users choose certain profile pictures to portray themselves as attractive or fun-loving, as popular, or to show their relationship status, which aim to create a particular image of the individual and to shape others' impressions of them. Instagram users also report posting images to express themselves or present a particular image to others. In line with this, Facebook users also report untagging themselves from images posted by others if those photos are unattractive or portray them doing something they don't want others to know about. However, this is not to say that Facebook identities are completely divorced from who the person is offline. Researchers compared self-ratings of individuals' actual personality and their idealized self with ratings made by observers of their Facebook profile. Observer ratings corresponded more closely with actual personality than idealized personality, suggesting that although people can use social media to influence others' perceptions of them, the images presented _____.

- ① reinforce their narcissism and envy
- ② are not wildly different from their actual selves
- ③ are not an illusion but a true reflection of their identity

Researchers like Blau, Scott, and Evan acknowledge that the concept of organization set was developed by analogy from Robert K. Merton's concept of role set.

- (A) The fundamental idea is a simple one, but its implications are quite rich. One is led to ask questions regarding, for example, the relative size of the organization set, the extent to which one group of role partners is aware of the demands made by another, and the extent to which expectations held by partners coincide.
- (B) Similarly, a given organization participates in a variety of relations depending on the identity of its specific partners and competitors. For example, a small grocery store will relate in one manner with its suppliers, another with its customers, yet another with city officials, and so on.
- (C) Merton noted that a single position such as

There are arguments about why faith in ‘more education’ might be misplaced. The entrepreneur Peter Thiel offers the most provocative version of that case. Instead, he is suspicious that we never get to see the counterfactual: how these students would have done without their education. His sense is that many of ③ whom would have earned just as much, and that universities are ‘just good at identifying talented people rather than adding value’. Thiel now offers $100,000 grants to young students who ④ choose to ‘skip or stop out of college’ to start companies instead. To illustrate the connection between thought and feeling, consider a soft drink dispenser in a self-service restaurant. Our particular model has a row of labeled buttons at the top and spouts underneath that dispense the desired beverage (A) if/whether the corresponding button is pushed. In our case, the buttons represent our interpretations — Wrong, Unfortunate, Terrible, Right and Shameful (or “I am wrong”). Should I, in any given situation, arrive at the interpretation that something is wrong and consequently push the soda fountain button for “I am wrong,” then the machine would ideally dispense the corresponding beverage, namely anger.

As long as I have awareness of pushing a certain button, the buttons (B) labeled / are labeled correctly and they are properly connected to the corresponding beverage container, the machine will function without a hitch. Unfortunately, most of us are unaware of the connections between interpretations on the mental level and our corresponding reactions on the emotional level, however. Because of this, we often behave like people who continuously push buttons on a soda machine and watch in desperation as the cup overflows. We do not notice that we are pushing the button since we are completely unaware of its existence. We are oblivious to the fact that a particular interpretation is made before anger, for example, arises in our system — namely, “This is wrong.” When we become aware of this interpretation, it is like suddenly watching our own thumb continuously (C) push / pushed the soda button despite the fact that we have already filled up our cup or would actually prefer lemonade or water instead.

I was once sitting in Ben Gurion Airport, waiting for my flight to be announced. Suddenly I heard a strange, almost animal-like noise. Antiracist educator and author Debby Irving uses an often-cited headwinds and tailwinds metaphor to explain the invisibility of the systemic, group-level differences that treat different groups of people differently. Headwinds are the challenges — some big, some small, some visible, some invisible — that make life harder for some people, but not for all people. When you run against a headwind, your speed slows down and you have to push harder. You can feel the headwind. When you have a tailwind pushing you, it is _____. It is consequential but easily unnoticed or forgotten. In fact, if you are like me when I jog with a tailwind, you may glow with pride at your great running time that day, as if it were your own athletic prowess. When you have the tailwind, you will not notice that some runners are running into headwinds. They may be running as hard as, or even harder than, you, but they will appear lazier and slower to you. Like in the early days of industrialization, workers today are no longer reaping the gains of progress. Worse, many have been left behind in the backwaters of progress. In the same way that opportunity dried up for middle-income artisans as a consequence of the industrialization process, the age of automation has meant diminishing opportunities for the American middle class. Like the victims of the early factories, many Americans have adjusted to the computerization of work by unwillingly shifting into lower-paying jobs or have failed to adjust and dropped out of the workforce completely. And similar to the victims of the factories, the losers to automation have primarily been men in the prime of life. We do not have an environmental problem so much as we have a story problem. Or so says David Korten, who argues that the grave environmental challenges we face today have been set in motion by the predominating cultural lens of what he calls the “sacred money and markets story.” This has been a story with catastrophic outcomes, contends Korten. Is there a way to fix it? Korten thinks there is: intervene. Change the Story, Change the Future, Korten proclaims in his book on creating more sustainable and just earth economies. Intervening in the “sacred money and markets story” and supplanting it with the “sacred life and living earth story” as the prevailing story of our time, he argues, will result in changing the human cognition and behavior that got us into our current environmental mess. Change the story, and we will climb our way out of destruction and despair and begin the repair and recovery of life systems on the planet. When we are young, we see our parents as people who always know the answers. That's probably why as soon as we can think independently, around the ages of 4-5, we start asking a lot of questions. Parents try to answer these questions in a way that a young mind can comprehend. However, when it comes to learning lessons about money, our parents' answers to these questions get written into a money blueprint. Even worse, a passing comment about money in the kitchen or at the dinner table can have a lasting effect. For example, a common phrase used by parents in response to a child's request for something is "No, we can't afford that." Think for a moment about how a young mind might interpret that. The message could be interpreted as "we don't have enough money" or "there isn't enough money." It is interesting to reflect on the possible connection between increasing individualism and rising mental ill-health. This is discussed at length in Oliver James's book Affluenza, in which he points out that the United States, the world's most individualist society, is also on the (A) top / bottom of the league for mental disorders (as recorded by the World Health Organization's World Mental Health Survey). Several other countries that rate highly on individualism also figure highly in this league table. Comparing just 14 countries, including New Zealand (2nd), France (4th) and the Netherlands (7th), James defines 'affluenza' as 'the placing of a high value on money, possessions, appearances (physical and social) and fame', and he (B) attributes / contributes this to what he calls 'selfish capitalism'. It could certainly be argued that the relative importance attached to (C) spiritual / materialistic factors related to self-esteem is particularly important in cultures where 'selfish capitalism' is strong.

Sensors are opening vast new windows on the cosmos. Thanks to the constant advance of sensors and effectors in the form of adaptive optics, discovery of extrasolar planets moved from science fiction to commonplace with breathtaking speed. In the near future, sensor advances will allow us to analyze exoplanetary atmospheres and look for signatures of civilization. ① The same trends will open new horizons for amateur astronomers, who will soon enjoy affordable technical means to match the Kepler space telescope in planet-finding skills. ② Sensors are thus as much about democratizing amateur science as the creation of ever more powerful instruments. ③ Democratizing science does not mean settling questions about nature by voting; it means creating institutions and practices that fully incorporate principles of accessibility, transparency, and accountability. ④ The Kepler satellite imaged a field of 115°, or a mere 0.25 percent of the sky. ⑤ Planet-finding amateurs using digitally empowered backyard scopes could put a serious dent in the 99.75 percent of the sky yet to be examined.

Basic manners fit into the category of fundamentally important social phenomena we tend to overlook. When I moved to Vancouver from California, one of the first things that struck me was that the natives, when exiting public buses through the back door, always shouted out a loud and cheerful Thank you! to the bus driver. It initially struck me as a bit excessive, but I've since come to see it not only as an expression of a fundamentally more pleasant populace but also as a ritual that probably helps to create more pleasant people. The bus driver, whether she realizes it or not, feels better having been thanked; she is now more inclined to drive courteously, or to remain at the stop that extra second to allow someone running late to hop on the bus. This behavior ripples out across my rainy city in subtle waves, inclining people toward virtue like wind blowing over the grass.

*populace 대중 courteously 친절하게 ripple 파문처럼 퍼지다

- ① risks and outcomes of social exclusion
- ② the necessity of learning virtue in everyday life
- ③ the infectious nature of unkindness and rudeness
- ④ the significance of basic manners in various social contexts
- ⑤ the positive ripple effect of basic manners on others and community

It matters to us how things are. But how things are not can be equally important. It matters when something you want is not there.

- (A) When a loved one is no longer around, the feeling of their absence is profound. Some fear their own non-existence more than anything else. In other cases, things not being a certain way can be entirely mundane. Someone might regret not being six-feet tall or not being a better chess player.
- (B) But some cases of what is not are of great, even cosmic importance. It matters enormously that the planet Earth is not closer to the sun than it is. It is likely that there would be no human life on the planet if it were.
- (C) In a variety of circumstances, it matters that a drink is sugar-free. A migraine sufferer might want any pudding as long as it is not chocolate. Anyone with an allergy or intolerance will have a similar type of negative preference. It could matter to someone that a particular train does not stop in Wakefield, if they were planning to get off there. Bereavement matters too.

‘Mindreading’ refers to the cognitive ability to attribute psychological states to other people. It is distinct from ‘social cognition’ which has the broader referent base of ‘the cognitive structures that facilitate our ability to navigate the social world’. Social cognition is a broader category than mindreading because it is possible to successfully interact with other people without attributing psychological states to them. One might have a perfectly successful social interaction with another by responding to their behaviours, without giving any thought to the psychological states that caused them. Alternatively, one might anticipate the behaviours of another person based on social protocols about how one ought to behave in a particular situation, for example, at a pedestrian crossing or waiting in line to get on a bus. Such social protocols extend to how we expect people in different roles to behave, for example, the behaviours we expect of a bus driver and a fellow passenger. These are all instances of interacting with others which do not obviously involve _____.

*protocol 관습, (군대·궁전 등의) 의례

- ① reasoning about their psychological states
 ② anticipation about the consequence of their actions
 ③ our cognitive thinking process and mental efforts
 ④ observance of social convention and social norms
 ⑤ intentional thinking of mindreading and social cognition

The problem of free will has real-world implications for our self-understanding, our interpersonal relationships, and our moral and legal practices. The assumption that we have free will lurks behind the justification of many of our everyday attitudes and judgments. For instance, when someone morally wrongs us, not only do we experience resentment and moral anger; we typically feel that we are justified in doing so, since we assume that, absent any excusing conditions, people are free and morally responsible for what they do and are therefore appropriate targets for such responses. We also typically assume that when individuals “act of their own free will,” they justly deserve to be praised and blamed, punished and rewarded for their actions since they are morally responsible for what they do. Similar assumptions are made in the criminal law. The US Supreme Court, for instance, has asserted: “A ‘universal and persistent’ foundation stone in our system of law, and particularly in our approach to punishment, sentencing, and incarceration, is the ‘belief in freedom of the human will and a consequent ability and duty of the normal individual to choose between good and evil.’”

*lurk 잠재하다 incarceration 감금, 투옥

- ② Free Will Is Not Without Its Limits and Problems

An aeronautical engineer who sets about the task of developing a new airplane will start by performing theoretical analyses involving thrust, lift, and drag. Next, she will build models and run experiments. And most important, as the plane is built, its components will be assembled, adjusted, and tested while the plane is safely on the ground. Evolution has no such _____. As a species evolves it always has to be done “in flight.” Every sequential modification has to be fully functional and competitive. The neuroscientist David Linden has described the human brain as the progressive accumulation of evolutionary kludges, or quick-and-dirty fixes. During brain evolution, new structures were placed on top of the older functional structures, leading to redundancy, waste of resources, unnecessary complexity, and sometimes competing solutions to the same problem. Furthermore, as new computational requirements emerged, they had to be implemented with the current hardware. There is no switching from analog to digital along the way.

Self-presentation and/or impression management have been long identified as motivators for SNS use. Specific to image sharing, Facebook users choose certain profile pictures to portray themselves as attractive or fun-loving, as popular, or to show their relationship status, which aim to create a particular image of the individual and to shape others' impressions of them. Instagram users also report posting images to express themselves or present a particular image to others. In line with this, Facebook users also report untagging themselves from images posted by others if those photos are unattractive or portray them doing something they don't want others to know about. However, this is not to say that Facebook identities are completely divorced from who the person is offline. Researchers compared self-ratings of individuals' actual personality and their idealized self with ratings made by observers of their Facebook profile. Observer ratings corresponded more closely with actual personality than idealized personality, suggesting that although people can use social media to influence others' perceptions of them, the images presented are not wildly different from their actual selves.

Researchers like Blau, Scott, and Evan acknowledge that the concept of organization set was developed by analogy from Robert K. Merton's concept of role set. Merton noted that a single position such as "mother" is associated with not one, but a cluster of different roles depending on the identity of the counterpositions. Thus, a mother has specific role obligations toward her children, others toward the father, still others toward the child's teachers, and so on. Similarly, a given organization _____ depending on the identity of its specific partners and competitors. For example, a small grocery store will relate in one manner with its suppliers, another with its customers, yet another with city officials, and so on. The fundamental idea is a simple one, but its implications are quite rich. One is led to ask questions regarding, for example, the relative size of the organization set, the extent to which one group of role partners is aware of the demands made by another, and the extent to which expectations held by partners coincide.

*organization set 조직 집합

- ② divides roles among its members

There are arguments about why faith in ‘more education’ might be misplaced. The entrepreneur Peter Thiel offers the most provocative version of that case. He claims that higher education is a ‘bubble’, arguing that it is ‘overpriced’ because people do not get ‘their money’s worth’ but go to college ‘simply because that’s what everybody’s doing.’ Thiel does not deny that those who are better educated tend to earn more on average. Instead, he is suspicious that we never get to see the counterfactual: how these students would have done without their education. His sense is that many of them would have earned just as much, and that universities are ‘just good at identifying talented people rather than adding value’. Thiel now offers $100,000 grants to young students who choose to ‘skip or stop out of college’ to start companies instead. The Thiel Foundation, which manages the grants, points out that its recipients have started sixty companies worth a combined total of over $1.1 billion.

I was working through college selling children's books door to door in Florida. One particularly blistering day nothing was going right. I had knocked on every door without a single answer; I was hot, tired, and felt like a total failure. Then, I looked down the street at a small white house and was drawn toward it. 내가 문을 노크하자마자 한 연로한 여성이 문을 열어주었다 and immediately asked me in. She gave me a drink and invited me to share a meal with her and her husband. It was obvious that they did not have much money. During the two hours I was there, the woman and her husband shared stories of the hardships and experiences in their lives and told me that it was very important to always love and care deeply about others — even strangers. As I left, the man gave me money and said he just wanted to help me out and that he had no need for my books. As I walked back down the street I broke into tears and kept crying for blocks. Antiracist educator and author Debby Irving uses an often-cited headwinds and tailwinds metaphor to explain the invisibility of the systemic, group-level differences that treat different groups of people differently. Headwinds are the challenges — some big, some small, some visible, some invisible — that make life harder for some people, but not for all people. When you run against a headwind, your speed slows down and you have to push harder. You can feel the headwind. When you have a tailwind pushing you, it is a force that propels you forward. Zhang Heng was born in Henan, China in 78 CE. In his youth, he traveled to Chang'an and Luoyang to receive his education. Zhang Heng showed an early aptitude for literary pursuits and achieved fame for his poetry in his 20s. His work To Live in Seclusion is considered a masterpiece of the late Han dynasty. While most educated young men in China at the time sought to obtain government posts, Zhang Heng spent many years learning mathematics and astronomy instead. His accomplishments in these fields are extremely noteworthy and rival his literary fame. He was able to create an accurate chart of the stars, which assisted in keeping the imperial calendar accurate. When we are young, we see our parents as people who always know the answers. That’s probably why as soon as we can think independently, around the ages of 4-5, we start asking a lot of questions. Parents try to answer these questions in a way that a young mind can comprehend. However, when it comes to learning lessons about money, our parents’ answers to these questions get written into a money blueprint. Even (A) better / worse, a passing comment about money in the kitchen or at the dinner table can have a lasting effect. The idea that zebra stripes work to confuse predators while the zebra is in motion is a relatively early theory. This is a plausible possibility; zebras have the high-contrast patterning generally ① thought to promote dazzle effects, and as herd animals they might benefit from an interaction between dazzle effects and confusion effects ② creating when targeting individuals in groups. They also have visually oriented lions and hyenas as their main predators, and as large animals that live in the open, they might find ③ camouflaging via other mechanisms difficult. The motion dazzle hypothesis has been studied in zebras by modelling the motion signals created by moving zebra stripes. This analysis shows that zebra stripes create strong motion signals in directions other than the true direction of movement, supporting the hypothesis that zebra stripes make movement processing ④ difficultly. While most recent work focuses on whether zebra stripes function as protection against biting insects rather than mammalian carnivores, this idea is not necessarily mutually exclusive with the dazzle hypothesis. Rather than (or in addition to) lions and hyenas, stripes may target the motion processing of ⑤ much smaller but no less fitness-reducing flies instead.

It is interesting to reflect on the possible connection between increasing individualism and rising mental ill-health. This is discussed at length in Oliver James's book Affluenza, (A) which he points out that the United States, the world's most individualist society, is also on the top of the league for mental disorders (as recorded by the World Health Organization's World Mental Health Survey). Several other countries that rate highly on individualism also (B) figures highly in this league table. Comparing just 14 countries, including New Zealand (2nd), France (4th) and the Netherlands (7th), James defines 'affluenza' as 'the placing of a high value on money, possessions, appearances (physical and social) and fame', and he attributes this to (C) which he calls 'selfish capitalism'. It could certainly be argued that the relative importance attached to materialistic factors related to self-esteem is particularly important in cultures where 'selfish capitalism' is strong.

Sensors are opening vast new windows on the cosmos. Thanks to the constant advance of sensors and effectors in the form of adaptive optics, discovery of extrasolar planets moved from science fiction to _____ with breathtaking speed. In the near future, sensor advances will allow us to analyze exoplanetary atmospheres and look for signatures of civilization. The same trends will open new horizons for amateur astronomers, who will soon enjoy affordable technical means to match the Kepler space telescope in planet-finding skills. Sensors are thus as much about democratizing amateur science as the creation of ever more powerful instruments. The Kepler satellite imaged a field of 115°, or a mere 0.25 percent of the sky. Planet-finding amateurs using digitally empowered backyard scopes could put a serious dent in the 99.75 percent of the sky yet to be examined.

Basic manners fit into the category of fundamentally important social phenomena we tend to overlook. When I moved to Vancouver from California, one of the first things that struck me was that the natives, when (A) exit public buses through the back door, always shouted out a loud and cheerful Thank you! to the bus driver. 그것은 처음에는 나에게서는 조금 과하다는 느낌이 들었다, but I've since come to see it not only as an expression of a fundamentally more pleasant populace but also as a ritual that probably helps to create more pleasant people. The bus driver, whether she realizes it or not, feels better (B) be thanked; she is now more inclined to drive courteously, or to remain at the stop that extra second to allow someone running late to hop on the bus. It matters to us how things are. But how things are not can be equally ① important. It matters when something you want is not there. 'Mindreading' refers to the cognitive ability to (A) attribute psychological states to other people. It is distinct from 'social cognition' which has the broader referent base of 'the cognitive structures that facilitate our ability to navigate the social world'. Social cognition is a broader category than mindreading because it is possible to successfully interact with other people without attributing psychological states to them. One might have a perfectly successful social interaction with another by responding to their behaviours, without giving any thought to the psychological states that caused them. Alternatively, one might anticipate the behaviours of another person based on social protocols about how one ought to behave in a particular situation, for example, at a pedestrian crossing or waiting in line to get on a bus. Such social protocols extend to how we expect people in different roles to behave, for example, the behaviours we expect of a bus driver and a fellow passenger. These are all instances of interacting with others which do not obviously involve reasoning about their psychological states.

The problem of free will has real-world implications for our self-understanding, our interpersonal relationships, and our moral and legal practices. The assumption ① which we have free will lurks behind the _____ of many of our everyday attitudes and judgments. For instance, when someone morally wrongs us, not only ② we experience resentment and moral anger; we typically feel that we ③ are justified in doing so, since we assume that, absent any excusing conditions, people are free and morally responsible for what they do and are therefore appropriate targets for such responses. We also typically assume that when individuals “act of their own free will,” they justly deserve to be praised and blamed, punished and rewarded for their actions since they are morally responsible for ④ what they do. Similar assumptions are made in the criminal law. The US Supreme Court, for instance, has asserted: “A ‘universal and persistent’ foundation stone in our system of law, and particularly in our approach to punishment, sentencing, and incarceration, ⑤ are the ‘belief in freedom of the human will and a consequent ability and duty of the normal individual to choose between good and evil.’”

An aeronautical engineer who sets about the task of developing a new airplane will start by performing theoretical analyses involving thrust, lift, and drag. Next, she will build models and run experiments. And most important, as the plane is built, its components will be assembled, adjusted, and tested while the plane is safely on the ground. Evolution has no such luxury. As a species evolves it always has to be done “in flight.” Every sequential modification has to be fully functional and competitive. The neuroscientist David Linden has described the human brain as the progressive _____ of evolutionary kludges, or quick-and-dirty fixes. During brain evolution, new structures were placed on top of the older functional structures, leading to redundancy, waste of resources, unnecessary complexity, and sometimes competing solutions to the same problem. Furthermore, as new computational requirements emerged, they had to be implemented with the current hardware. There is no switching from analog to digital along the way.

Self-presentation and/or impression management have been long identified as ① motivators for SNS use. Instagram users also report posting images to express (A) them or present a particular image to others. In line with this, Facebook users also report ③ tagging themselves from images posted by others if those photos are unattractive or portray (B) themselves doing something they don't want others to know about. However, this is not to say that Facebook identities are completely ④ divorced from who the person is offline. Researchers compared self-ratings of individuals' actual personality and their idealized self with ratings made by observers of their Facebook profile. To illustrate the connection between thought and feeling, consider a soft drink dispenser in a self-service restaurant. Our particular model has a row of labeled buttons at the top and spouts underneath that dispense ① the desired beverage if the corresponding button is pushed. In our case, the buttons represent our interpretations — Wrong, Unfortunate, Terrible, Right and Shameful (or “I am wrong”). 만약 내가 어떤 특정한 상황에서 무언가가 잘못되었다는 해석에 도달해서 결과적으로 내가 틀렸다는 탄산음료가 나오는 버튼을 누르면, 그 기계는 그에 해당하는 음료, 즉 분노를 완벽하게 내놓을 것이다.

As long as I have awareness of pushing a certain button, the buttons are labeled correctly and they are properly connected to the corresponding beverage container, the machine will function without a hitch. Unfortunately, most of us are unaware of the connections between interpretations on the mental level and ② our corresponding reactions on the emotional level, however. Because of this, we often behave like people who continuously push buttons on a soda machine and watch in desperation as the cup overflows. We do not notice that we are pushing ③ the button since we are completely unaware of its existence. We are oblivious to the fact that a particular interpretation is made before ④ anger, for example, arises in our system — namely, “This is wrong.” When we become aware of ⑤ this interpretation, it is like suddenly watching our own thumb continuously push the soda button despite the fact that we have already filled up our cup or would actually prefer lemonade or water instead.

I was once sitting in Ben Gurion Airport, waiting for my flight to ① be announced. Suddenly I heard a strange, almost animal-like noise. I looked around and realized that a woman sitting a few rows in front of me was weeping loudly. I was a little thrown and did not know what to do. Should I allow her privacy? Should I approach her? My heart went out to her crying alone in an airport.

An older woman, who had also noticed her, went up to her and said something, but then moved away again and I guessed that she had refused an offer of help. She continued with her aching crying, and I continued to wonder if I should do something nonetheless. Eventually I took my courage and went over. 정답 및 해설 p.38

① We argue that a transition towards more sustainable lifestyles will come from re-visioning the human place in nature, realizing ourselves not as separate, but as part of the whole, with a responsibility to nurture the biosphere forever. ② It will not occur because we are afraid of weathering the ‘perfect storm’ of unsustainability. ③ Instead, we believe that what is needed is a deeper and more positive process: a re-visioning of the relationship between people and planet, undertaken in different ways by individuals, families, communities and nations. ④ Such visions will show the potential for reconnection to bring about not just planetary health, but also personal well-being, joy, health and flourishing. ⑤ There is strong evidence to show that well-being — the ‘good stuff’ of life — is brought about by such reconnection of the human and the natural. ⑥ It is a vision to find a way towards reconciling our aspirations with the finitudes of our planet.

We argue that a ❶ transition / translation towards more sustainable lifestyles will come from re-visioning the human place in nature, realizing ourselves not as separate, but as part of the whole, with a responsibility to nurture the biosphere forever. It will not occur because we are afraid of weathering the ‘perfect storm’ of unsustainability. Instead, we believe that ❷ which / what is needed is a deeper and more ❸ positive / negative process: a re-visioning of the relationship between people and planet, undertaken in different ways by individuals, families, communities and nations. Such visions will show the potential for reconnection to bring about not just planetary health, ❹ as well / but also personal well-being, joy, health and flourishing. There is strong evidence to show that well-being — the ‘good stuff’ of life — is brought about by such reconnection of the human and the natural. ① It is important to understand the distinction between indicators of market or nonmarket activity and well-defined measures of benefit or cost. ② While economic values are often related to human activities, simple indicators viewed in isolation (e.g., number of beach visits) can sometimes provide misleading perspectives. ③ For example, simple activity indicators ignore values realized by nonusers or benefits related to unmeasured activities (i.e., activities not captured by the indicator in question). ④ Because of these and other limitations, indicators of economic activity sometimes increase due to negative changes in the environment. ⑤ Suppose that closing local beach A due to pollution causes more people to visit neighboring unpolluted beach B. ⑥ An analyst looking solely at visitor numbers for beach B might incorrectly conclude that this represents a positive change at beach B, when in fact more visitors to beach B simply reflects the closure of beach A (a substitute beach). ⑦ Using the appropriate economic frameworks for analysis can prevent such misleading conclusions. ⑧ Simple behavioral (and other) indicators can sometimes provide a cost-effective means to help guide policy — but they can also contribute to incorrect conclusions if not paired with more comprehensive economic analysis.

① 시장 또는 비시장 활동의 지표와 이익 또는 비용에 대한 명확한 척도 사이의 차이를 이해하는 것이 중요하다. ② 경제적 가치는 인간의 활동과 관련이 있을 때가 많지만, 분리해서 보는 단순한 지표(예를 들어, 해변 방문 횟수)는 때때로 오해를 일으키는 관점을 제공할 수 있다. ③ 예를 들어, 단순 활동 지표는 비사용자에 의해 실현된 값이나 측정되지 않은 활동과 관련된 이익(즉, 해당 지표에 포착되지 않은 활동)을 무시한다. ④ 이것들과 다른 이런저런 한계들 때문에, 경제 활동 지표는 환경 내의 부정적인 변화 때문에 때때로 증가한다. ⑤ 오염으로 인해 지역의 A 해수욕장이 폐쇄되면 더 많은 사람이 이웃한 오염되지 않은 B 해수욕장을 방문하게 된다고 가정해 보라. ⑥ 오로지 B 해수욕장에 대한 방문자 수만을 바라보는 분석가는 실제로는 B 해수욕장의 더 많은 방문객이 단순히 A 해수욕장(대체 해수욕장)의 폐쇄를 반영하고 있는데도, 이것이 B 해수욕장의 긍정적인 변화를 나타낸다는 잘못된 결론을 내릴 수도 있다. ⑦ 적절한 경제 분석 틀을 사용하면 오해를 일으키는 그러한 결론을 방지할 수 있다. ⑧ 단순한 행동 (그리고 기타) 지표가 때로는 정책을 이끄는 데 도움이 되는 비용 효과가 높은 수단을 제공할 수 있지만, 만약 더 포괄적인 경제 분석과 결합하지 않으면 그것들은 또한 잘못된 결론의 원인이 될 수 있다.

① Plans need to have a degree of flexibility under changing circumstances, but settling on clear deadlines and tasks helps to avoid opening up the problematic flexibility that can open the door to interpreting delay as something other than that. ② To take an illustration from the context of health, consider Gary, who has noticed that he has been getting colds quite frequently and thinks that it would be good to make an appointment with a primary care physician soon to get some medical tests done. ③ And yet, he finds himself putting it off. ④ Gary thinks of himself as conscientious and certainly not someone who would fail to take care of himself. ⑤ As he considers, at a certain point, whether to phone the doctor or put it off for a day, the lack of specificity in his intention affords him plenty of wiggle room for thinking that he is still going to make the appointment “soon.” ⑥ In such contexts, by entering into his calendar a specific time for making the call and an automatic reminder, Gary can create an attentional structure that makes it difficult for him to overlook the fact that failing to make the call at the appointed time is a case of delay.

① Even the care we take for nature is motivated by a certain goal-oriented striving under the heading of “conservation.” ② We treat nature as a scarce resource to be preserved for the health of the planet and the security of future generations. ③ But rarely do we attempt to appreciate and protect nature for its own sake, as a source of wonder and awe in the face of which we stand to gain new perspectives on ourselves and the goals we pursue. ④ When pressed to articulate why biodiversity matters, for example, we turn almost automatically to some account of how, when one species goes extinct, others will suffer, including, in the end, ourselves. ⑤ We lack the vocabulary in which to understand the diversity of nature as intrinsically meaningful and as worthy of our engagement.

① Great fairytales are full of suspense and emotional ups and downs, with the hero or heroine fighting and then overcoming antagonists and obstacles. ② The bigger the difficulties and the greater the suspense, the more interesting the story. ③ Cinderella had no clothes, no carriage, and a rigid deadline. ④ She had lost her shoe. ⑤ Cinderella was sad, then happy because of the fairy Godmother, then scared again when the clock struck 12. ⑥ An interviewee faced an employer going bankrupt, saw her superiors resign, and was left with a weak team. ⑦ Both of these examples have a central character: Cinderella and the interviewee. ⑧ Audiences generally identify more with people and characters in the stories than with abstract discussion. ⑨ In business storytelling, when there is no one central character, characters can be woven into the body of the story. ⑩ For example: "In the next 10 minutes, I will show you five reasons why our business will disappear within five years if we continue with business as usual." ⑪ Then, one reason could include the story of how a big customer was disappointed and another reason could include the story of how a group of salesmen felt helpless.

"앞으로 10분 안에, 우리가 평소대로 사업을 계속한다면 5년 안에 우리의 사업이 사라질 5가지 이유를 보여 드리겠습니다." ⑪ 그런 다음 한 가지 이유에는 거물 고객이 어떻게 실망했는지에 대한 이야기가 포함될 수 있을 것이고 또 다른 이유에는 한 무리의 영업 사원들이 어떻게 무력감을 느꼈는지에 대한 이야기가 포함될 수 있을 것이다.

① 역사를 통틀어 사람들은 대규모 집단으로 사는 데에서 오는 이득을 누리고 거기서 오는 위험을 관리하기 위해 다양한 정도로 자신들의 자원을 공동 관리해 왔다. ② 이 이득에는 노동의 전문화, 공동 방위, 그리고 기반 시설 공유가 포함된다. ③ 가족에서 마을, 대도시, 국민 국가로 집단이 더 커지면서, 상호 간의 의무는 더 추상적이 되어 흔히 제도와 정치 과정을 통해 중재된다. ④ 우리 의무는 우리 가족이나 공동체에 무언가를 ‘빚지고 있기’보다는 동료 시민과의 연대나 국가에 대한 임무로 변한다. ⑤ 예를 들어, 과거에는 가족이 집에서 자기 아이를 교육했고 병자와 실직자를 돌보았지만, 오늘날은 대부분이 국가가 비용을 대는 학교, 의료 시설, 그리고 (몇몇 나라에서는) 실업 수당에 의존한다. ⑥ 그 때문에 오늘날 사람들은 생산적인 성인일 때 공익에 기여하고, 그 대가로 어릴 때는 교육을, 아프거나 실직하거나 늙었을 때는 부양을 받을 것으로 기대된다. ⑦ 이런 기대의 정확한 속성은 더 넓은 사회의 그것들[권리와 의무]에 견주어 개인의 권리와 의무를 규정하는 문화적 규범, 제도, 정책과 법에 따라 다르지만, 그런 기대가 존재하는 것은 보편적이다.

① The debate about how to understand social life has ancient roots and can be traced at least as far back as Plato, who analyzed the differing worldviews of poetry and philosophy (which was at the time an approximation of science). ② Echoes of this debate are still heard today in the endless dialogue between the humanities and the sciences regarding how the world may best be comprehended. ③ Some thinkers argue that the internal states of humans cannot be examined scientifically at all and must instead be understood nonscientifically via intuitive, interpretive, or even religious methods. ④ Even some scientists devoted to strong empiricism adopt this view. ⑤ B. F. Skinner, the leading twentieth-century advocate of behaviorism and the author of Walden Two, famously reasoned that internal mental states are unobservable and unquantifiable subjectivities and thus belong outside the range of objective scientific scrutiny, in contrast to observable (individual and collective) behaviors. ⑥ Some philosophers and theologians continue to embrace the age-old dualistic separation between the material world and the mental world. ⑦ The underlying claim is that we cannot use science to fully understand the soul or even feelings, thoughts, morals, or beauty. ⑧ While the issue of the soul is a matter unto itself, feelings, thoughts, morals, and even beauty — and their evolutionary origins — are, in fact, yielding increasingly to science in the twenty-first century with techniques as diverse as MRI imaging and behavior genetics.

Skinner는 내적 정신 상태는 관찰할 수 있는 (개인적이고 집단적인) 행동과는 대조적으로 관찰이 불가능하고 수량화할 수 없는 주관성을 지닌 것이며, 따라서 객관적인 과학적 면밀한 조사의 범위 밖에 속한다고 추론한 것으로 유명했다. ⑥ 몇몇 철학자들과 신학자들은 물질세계와 정신세계 간의 아주 오래된 이원론적 분리를 계속해서 받아들인다. ⑦ 근본적인 주장은 우리가 과학을 이용해 영혼 혹은 심지어 감정, 사고, 도덕, 혹은 미를 완전히 이해할 수 없다는 것이다. ⑧ 영혼의 문제는 그 자신만이 갖고 있는 문제이지만, 감정, 사고, 도덕, 그리고 미조차, 그리고 그것들의 진화적 기원도 사실상 자기 공명 영상법을 이용한 영상과 행동 유전학과 같은 다양한 기술을 가진 21세기 과학에 점점 더 굴복하고 있다.

You help other people understand you by creating a secure arena for communication — on their terms. Then the listener can use his energy to understand rather than to consciously or unconsciously react to your manner of communicating. All of us need to develop our flexibility and so be able to vary our style of communication, adapting it when we speak to people who are different from us. Here we find another truth: No matter what method you choose to communicate with, as an individual, you will always be in the minority. No matter what kind of behavior you have, the majority of people around you will function differently from you. You can't just base your method of communication on your own preferences. Flexibility and the ability to interpret other people's needs is what characterizes a good communicator. Knowing and understanding another person's style of behavior and method of communication will result in more educated guesses about how a person may possibly react in various situations. This understanding will also dramatically increase your ability to get through to the person in question.

The nature of the task can matter more than the nature of the person. Most of us have heard the theory that we each have a preferred learning style, and the more we can use the one that fits, the more we'll remember. Unfortunately, virtually no evidence supports that theory. That doesn't mean that all approaches to studying are equally effective — it's just that the strategy that works best _____.

Similarly, different parts of our personalities can serve different types of goals. We act extraverted when we want to connect with others or seize an opportunity, and we become disciplined when we want to get something done or avoid mistakes. Gifts are one way of defining a private world of love and ritual which is different from, and in contrast to, the impersonal capitalist economy. Yet gift giving in modern society is affected by that economy. This is most obvious in the case of monetary gifts, whose value lies entirely in the capacity to purchase things in the marketplace. However, it also exists in the case of gifts of things where those gifts consist, as most do, of things that are purchased. There is a problem here. In advanced capitalist societies, consumption by individuals of things that they do not produce is a massive activity. There is a danger here that purchased gifts will lose their significance in the face of all the things that individuals purchase for themselves. Gift giving separates a world of love and ritual from the capitalist economy, but in the end the two systems of meaning cannot be entirely separated because they are interconnected.

The meaning of gift giving is strongly _____ (A) _____ by the capitalist economy because the private world of love and ritual clearly expressed by gift giving cannot be completely _____ (B) _____ it.

We argue that a transition towards more sustainable lifestyles will come from re-visioning the human place in nature, realizing ourselves not as separate, but as part of the whole, with a responsibility to nurture the biosphere forever. It will not occur because we are afraid of weathering the ‘perfect storm’ of unsustainability.

① Instead, we believe that what is needed is a deeper and more positive process: a re-visioning of the relationship between people and planet, undertaken in different ways by individuals, families, communities and nations. ② Such visions will show the potential for reconnection to bring about not just planetary health, but also personal well-being, joy, health and flourishing. ③ Specifically, the field of planetary health focuses on social movements that analyze and address the impacts of human disruptions to Earth’s natural systems on human health and all life on Earth. ④ There is strong evidence to show that well-being — the ‘good stuff’ of life — is brought about by such reconnection of the human and the natural. ⑤ It is a vision to find a way towards reconciling our aspirations with the finitudes of our planet.

In cultures based on a rigid social hierarchy, with strict adherence to rules, visual art tends to adopt well-ordered, conventional, rigid and stereotypical forms. Ancient Egyptian art does not attempt to depict depth or distance, or the layout of objects in a scene. The same drawing system persisted for almost 3,000 years. Objects were arranged in a flat picture plane along lines drawn on walls. Objects and their parts were observed with great precision, but depicted in a way that conveyed shape in the most simplified manner. In human figures the torso was drawn from the front, but the head, waist and limbs were drawn in profile. Medieval artists revived the Egyptian reluctance to record the natural world faithfully, favouring instead depictions of the human form that conform to a strict formula involving expressionless, flat figures without individuality. This system of depiction was driven by religious concerns to avoid glorifying the attributes of individuals and their unique viewpoint on the world. There was little attempt to portray realistic depth, and the depicted stature of figures tended to reflect their social status.

The search for publicity is, at heart, a quest for a shortcut to friendship. Yet real kindness is never available in a public sphere. It is the fruit of a few intimate and reciprocal connections. ① It cannot be won remotely or one-sidedly. ② If it is safety one seeks, one must definitively and immediately cease to strive to be known to people one doesn't know and concentrate instead on building up genuine bonds that can survive one's errors and endure for life. ③ Communication skills and stress management techniques are essential not only in managing conflict but also in building trust, bonds, and a sense of safety in the relationships. ④ Paradoxically and poignantly, it is most often the very anxious who feel a particular longing for the embrace of fame; but it is especially they (given their fragility) who should be warned away from its ultimately always revengeful arms. ⑤ Being entirely forgotten by the world is no curse or sign of failure; it is the very basis for a contented and safe life in which one swaps the prospect of followers and mean-minded detractors for the deeper satisfaction of true friends.

It is important to understand the distinction between indicators of market or nonmarket activity and well-defined measures of benefit or cost. While economic values are often related to human activities, simple indicators viewed in isolation (e.g., number of beach visits) can sometimes provide misleading perspectives. For example, simple activity indicators ignore values realized by nonusers or benefits related to unmeasured activities (i.e., activities not captured by the indicator in question). Because of these and other limitations, indicators of economic activity sometimes increase due to negative changes in the environment. Suppose that closing local beach A due to pollution causes more people to visit neighboring unpolluted beach B. An analyst looking solely at visitor numbers for beach B might incorrectly conclude that this represents a positive change at beach B, when in fact more visitors to beach B simply reflects the closure of beach A (a substitute beach). Using the appropriate economic frameworks for analysis can prevent such misleading conclusions. Simple behavioral (and other) indicators can sometimes provide a cost-effective means to help guide policy — but they can also contribute to incorrect conclusions if not paired with more comprehensive economic analysis.

Yet, those hidden photos are critically important to the process of image-making.

When you look at the photos of an expert like Malick Sidibé, you are looking at a small fraction of the portraits he chose to show his viewers. Photos with closed eyes, crooked clothing, unflattering expressions, or those with a poor exposure, were surely edited out and hidden from his audience. Street photographers like Joel Meyerowitz make thousands of photos that are never seen by fans. His discriminating eye chooses exactly what he wants his audience to see. (①) Any digital image that doesn't meet Meyerowitz's personal expectations is put in a folder that may never be opened again. (②) Most of the photographs anyone makes will likely end up in a digital junk heap on a forgotten hard drive. (③) The point is that photographers put a lot of creative energy, time, and expense into making photographs, most of which don't represent the quality the creator expects. (④) They represent the stages of failure and experimentation needed to arrive at a creative breakthrough. (⑤) Those in-between photos are part of the step-by-step development process that leads you from one successful image to the next.

As he considers, at a certain point, whether to phone the doctor or put it off for a day, the lack of specificity in his intention affords him plenty of wiggle room for thinking that he is still going to make the appointment “soon.”

Even the care we take for nature is motivated by a certain goal-oriented striving under the heading of “conservation.” We treat nature as a scarce resource to be preserved for the health of the planet and the security of future generations. But rarely do we attempt to appreciate and protect nature for its own sake, as a source of wonder and awe in the face of which we stand to gain new perspectives on ourselves and the goals we pursue. When pressed to articulate why biodiversity matters, for example, we turn almost automatically to some account of how, when one species goes extinct, others will suffer, including, in the end, ourselves. We lack the vocabulary in which to understand the diversity of nature as intrinsically meaningful and as worthy of our engagement.

Sport does not require architecture. A field can serve as the grounds for footraces, ball games, and other modes of sporting activity. Early football games in England famously, or perhaps notoriously, took place without (A) fixed / unfixed dimensions and across the townscape. Swimming, boating, surfing all can take place in natural, undesigned sites. The exterior wall of a building can be the backboard for handball or tennis. Nevertheless, the architecture of sport stretches back through history to the earliest exemplars of built forms. This is notable for both sporting and architectural reasons. In order to design and build sport architecture, there must already be in place some degree of codification of the rules of the game to be played and the minimum spatial dimensions necessary to (B) overtake / undertake that activity. Great fairytales are full of suspense and emotional ups and downs, with the hero or heroine fighting and then overcoming antagonists and obstacles. The bigger the difficulties and the greater the suspense, the more interesting the story. Cinderella had no clothes, no carriage, and a rigid deadline. She had lost her shoe. Cinderella was sad, then happy because of the fairy Godmother, then scared again when the clock struck 12. An interviewee faced an employer going bankrupt, saw her superiors resign, and was left with a weak team. Both of these examples have a central character: Cinderella and the interviewee. Audiences generally _____. In business storytelling, when there is no one central character, characters can be woven into the body of the story. For example: "In the next 10 minutes, I will show you five reasons why our business will disappear within five years if we continue with business as usual." Throughout history, people have pooled their resources to varying degrees in order to enjoy the benefits and manage the risks that come from living in large groups.

- (A) The exact nature of these expectations varies according to the cultural norms, institutions, policies and laws that define the rights and obligations of individuals relative to those of the wider society, but the existence of such expectations is universal.
- (B) In the past, for example, families educated their children, cared for the sick and unemployed at home; today most rely on schools, medical facilities and (in some countries) unemployment benefits paid by the state. That is why today people are expected to contribute to the common good when they are productive adults and, in exchange, get an education when they are young and support when they are sick, unemployed or old.
- (C) These benefits include specialisation of labour, mutual defence and shared infrastructure. As groups get larger — from family to village to major cities and nation states — the mutual obligations become more abstract and are often mediated through institutions and the political process. Rather than ‘owe’ something to our family or community, our obligations morph into solidarity with fellow citizens or duty to our country.

Natural processes in soils in many places on the planet concentrate potentially hazardous geologic materials. The health hazards posed by these elements depend on the way humans interact with their environment, which can vary significantly among different cultures. Primitive cultures that live off the land are more susceptible to hazards and diseases associated with contaminated or poor water quality, toxic elements in plants harvested from contaminated soils, and insect- and animal-borne diseases associated with unsanitary environments. In contrast, more developed societies are more likely to be affected by air pollution, different types of water pollution, and indoor pollution such as radon exposure. Some diseases reflect a complex interaction among humans, insects or animals, climate, and the natural _____ of certain elements in the environment. For instance, schistosomiasis-bearing snails are abundant in parts of Africa and Asia where natural waters are rich in calcium derived from soils, but in similar climates in South America, the condition is rare. It is thought that this difference is because the waters in South America are calcium-poor, whereas disease-bearing snails need calcium to build their shells.

The United States lags in some sustainability indicators because it has already developed unsustainably. It's easier to start from scratch and develop sustainably than to fix all of the mistakes we've made. It will be very expensive to rebuild our infrastructure to be more sustainable. Leapfrogging allows developing countries to skip the implementation of old, inefficient technologies used in developed countries, thereby avoiding the environmentally harmful stages of economic development. For example, developing countries can build mobile phone networks that require much less raw materials and construction than land lines. They can deploy decentralized renewable energy systems such as PV panels, while in the United States we will be stuck for some time with old coal-fired power plants and an aging, inefficient electrical grid. U.S. cities and suburbs were built when energy was cheap and there were no concerns about global warming, so we are forced to drive great distances to accomplish everyday tasks. Developing countries can concentrate development in cities where people can live more sustainably, and preserve green space around the cities.

The debate about how to understand social life has ancient roots and can be traced at least as far back as Plato, who analyzed the differing worldviews of poetry and philosophy (which was at the time an approximation of science). Echoes of this debate are still heard today in the endless dialogue between the humanities and the sciences regarding how the world may best be comprehended. Some thinkers argue that the internal states of humans cannot be examined scientifically at all and must instead be understood nonscientifically via intuitive, interpretive, or even religious methods. Even some scientists devoted to strong empiricism adopt this view. B. F. Skinner, the leading twentieth-century advocate of behaviorism and the author of Walden Two, famously reasoned that internal mental states are unobservable and unquantifiable subjectivities and thus belong outside the range of objective scientific scrutiny, in contrast to observable (individual and collective) behaviors. Some philosophers and theologians continue to embrace the age-old _____ between the material world and the mental world. The underlying claim is that we cannot use science to fully understand the soul or even feelings, thoughts, morals, or beauty. While the issue of the soul is a matter unto itself, feelings, thoughts, morals, and even beauty — and their evolutionary origins — are, in fact, yielding increasingly to science in the twenty-first century with techniques as diverse as MRI imaging and behavior genetics.

Emily was the youngest of three daughters in a family of great soccer players. Her mother played soccer in high school and college, as did her two older sisters. Following in their footsteps, Emily began her freshman year of high school as a star player on the soccer team. Soon, however, Emily's coach noticed that while Emily had great skills, she just didn't show the kind of passion for the game she had seen in other great players she'd coached. She noticed something else about Emily: (a) she had an unusually graceful stride as she ran up and down the field.

And to her coach's surprise, Emily seemed to absolutely love the running drills that the other players hated during practice. One day, the coach called her over after practice. "Emily, why do (b) you play soccer?" she asked. Somewhat puzzled, she responded, "Because everyone in my family plays soccer. And because I'm really good at it." Then the coach asked, "But do you love it?"

With a somewhat dejected look, she shook her head. "Playing soccer was really fun when I was younger. But now it feels like something I have to do. Everyone expects (c) me to be like my mom and sisters. I don't want to let them down." That's when she realized that her job as Emily's coach had, in an important way, just begun. Rather than continue to try to get her to fit in as a soccer player, the coach asked Emily about her true interests. She wasn't surprised to learn that Emily had a passion for running. Running was effortless for (d) her, she said. When running long distances, she felt relaxed and free from all the worries and cares in her life.

After several more conversations with Emily and then an initially difficult discussion with her family, the coach and her family allowed Emily to leave the soccer team and switch to running track for the spring semester. By her junior year, Emily was the number one runner on the girls' cross-

Then the listener can use his energy to understand rather than to consciously or unconsciously react to your manner of communicating. All of us need to develop our flexibility and so be able to vary our style of communication, adapting it when we speak to people who are different from us. Here we find another truth: No matter what method you choose to communicate with, as an individual, you will always be in the minority. No matter what kind of behavior you have, the majority of people around you will function differently from you. You can't just base your method of communication on your own preferences. _____

Seven-tenths of the earth's surface lies under water. The great world ocean represents the vast majority of our planet's habitable space, and we depend on it in ways we may never have paused to reflect on. It is home to perhaps two million species, the bulk of them still unknown to science. But despite all that, anyone keeping track of contemporary politics could be forgiven for wondering if the ocean is there at all. Remarkably few of our governments contain Ministries for the Ocean (South Korea and Canada are rare exceptions), and our politicians rarely campaign on ocean-related issues (though fishing did emerge as an issue during the 2016 Brexit referendum). The ocean is governed by a complex body of international law which the average citizen probably knows little about. Going about your busy life, you might be tempted to file the ocean, its politics and the Law of the Sea in a mental box along with gravity or the internet. Art Tatum에 관한 다음 글의 내용과 일치하지 않는 것은?

Art Tatum (born in 1909 in Toledo, Ohio and died in 1956 in Los Angeles), is considered one of the greatest jazz pianists of all time. His performances were praised for their technical skills and creativity, which set a new standard for jazz piano virtuosity. Tatum, who was visually impaired from childhood, displayed an early talent for music. Although Tatum gained some formal piano training at the Toledo School of Music, he was largely self-taught. At age 13, after starting on the violin, Tatum concentrated on the piano and was soon performing on local radio programs. At 21 he moved to New York City, where he made his most impressive recordings during the 1930s and '40s. In 1943 he organized a trio with guitarist Tiny Grimes and bassist Slam Stewart, and he played mostly in the trio format for the rest of his life. Although Tatum was admired by many jazz musicians, his popularity faded in the mid to late 1940s with the advent of bebop — a movement that Tatum did not embrace.

In cultures based on a rigid social hierarchy, with strict adherence to rules, visual art tends to adopt well-ordered, conventional, rigid and stereotypical forms. Ancient Egyptian art does not attempt to depict depth or distance, or the layout of objects in a scene. The same drawing system persisted for almost 3,000 years. Objects were arranged in a flat picture plane along lines drawn on walls. Objects and their parts were observed with great precision, but depicted in a way that conveyed shape in the most simplified manner. In human figures the torso was drawn from the front, but the head, waist and limbs were drawn in profile. Medieval artists revived the Egyptian reluctance to record the natural world faithfully, favouring instead depictions of the human form that _____ involving expressionless, flat figures without individuality. This system of depiction was driven by religious concerns to avoid glorifying the attributes of individuals and their unique viewpoint on the world. There was little attempt to portray realistic depth, and the depicted stature of figures tended to reflect their social status.

The search for publicity is, at heart, a quest for a shortcut to friendship. Yet real kindness is never available in a public sphere. It is the fruit of a few intimate and reciprocal connections. It cannot be won remotely or one-sidedly. If it is safety one seeks, one must definitively and immediately cease to strive to be known to people one doesn't know and concentrate instead on building up genuine bonds that can survive one's errors and endure for life. Paradoxically and poignantly, it is most often the very anxious who feel a particular longing for the embrace of fame; but it is especially they (given their fragility) who should be warned away from its ultimately always revengeful arms. Being entirely forgotten by the world is no curse or sign of failure; it is the very basis for a contented and safe life in which one swaps the prospect of followers and mean-minded detractors for the deeper satisfaction of true friends.

*reciprocal 호혜적인 poignantly 통렬하게 detractor 비방하는 사람

- ② A True Friend Does Not Care about What People Think

An analyst looking solely at visitor numbers for beach B might incorrectly conclude that this represents a positive change at beach B, when in fact more visitors to beach B simply reflects the closure of beach A (a substitute beach).

It is important to understand the distinction between indicators of market or nonmarket activity and well-defined measures of benefit or cost. While economic values are often related to human activities, simple indicators viewed in isolation (e.g., number of beach visits) can sometimes provide misleading perspectives. (①) For example, simple activity indicators ignore values realized by nonusers or benefits related to unmeasured activities (i.e., activities not captured by the indicator in question). (②) Because of these and other limitations, indicators of economic activity sometimes increase due to negative changes in the environment. (③) Suppose that closing local beach A due to pollution causes more people to visit neighboring unpolluted beach B. (④) Using the appropriate economic frameworks for analysis can prevent such misleading conclusions. (⑤) Simple behavioral (and other) indicators can sometimes provide a cost-effective means to help guide policy — but they can also contribute to incorrect conclusions if not paired with more comprehensive economic analysis.

When you look at the photos of an expert like Malick Sidibé, you are looking at a small (A) fraction / friction of the portraits he chose to show his viewers. Photos with closed eyes, crooked clothing, unflattering expressions, or those with a poor exposure, were surely edited out and hidden from his audience. Street photographers like Joel Meyerowitz make thousands of photos that are never seen by fans. His (B) discriminating / indiscriminate eye chooses exactly what he wants his audience to see. Any digital image that doesn't meet Meyerowitz's personal expectations is put in a folder that may never be opened again. Most of the photographs anyone makes will likely end up in a digital junk heap on a forgotten hard drive. The point is that photographers put a lot of creative energy, time, and expense into making photographs, most of which don't represent the quality the creator expects. Yet, those hidden photos are critically (C) important / unimportant to the process of image-making. They represent the stages of failure and experimentation needed to arrive at a creative breakthrough. Plans need to have a degree of flexibility under changing circumstances, but settling on clear deadlines and tasks helps to avoid opening up the problematic flexibility that can open the door to interpreting delay as something other than that. To take an illustration from the context of health, consider Gary, who has noticed that he has been getting colds quite frequently and thinks that it would be good to make an appointment with a primary care physician soon to get some medical tests done. And yet, he finds himself putting it off. Gary thinks of himself as conscientious and certainly not someone who would fail to take care of himself. As he considers, at a certain point, whether to phone the doctor or put it off for a day, the lack of specificity in his intention affords him plenty of wiggle room for thinking that he is still going to make the appointment "soon." In such contexts, by entering into his calendar a specific time for making the call and an automatic reminder, Gary can create an attentional structure that makes it difficult for him to overlook the fact that failing to make the call at the appointed time is a case of delay.

Even the care we take for nature is motivated by a certain goal-oriented striving under the heading of “conservation.” We treat nature as a scarce resource to be preserved for the health of the planet and the security of future generations. But rarely do we attempt to _____, as a source of wonder and awe in the face of which we stand to gain new perspectives on ourselves and the goals we pursue. When pressed to articulate why biodiversity matters, for example, we turn almost automatically to some account of how, when one species goes extinct, others will suffer, including, in the end, ourselves. We lack the vocabulary in which to understand the diversity of nature as intrinsically meaningful and as worthy of our engagement.

*articulate 분명히 설명하다 intrinsically 본질적으로

Sport does not require architecture. A field can serve as the grounds for footraces, ball games, and other modes of sporting activity. Early football games in England famously, or perhaps notoriously, took place without fixed dimensions and across the townscape. Swimming, boating, surfing all can take place in natural, undesigned sites. The exterior wall of a building can be the backboard for handball or tennis. Nevertheless, the architecture of sport stretches back through history to the earliest exemplars of built forms.

- ① This is notable for both sporting and architectural reasons.
- ② In order to design and build sport architecture, there must already be in place some degree of codification of the rules of the game to be played and the minimum spatial dimensions necessary to undertake that activity.
- ③ The tensions involved in the globalization of sport and sport architecture increasingly revolve around how big money affects long-standing relationships between fans and the game.
- ④ Thus the precursor of our modern stadia, the stadium, was both the place where a footrace was run and a unit of measurement.
- ⑤ Sport architecture therefore emerges at the intersection of the codification of the rules of various games and means and mode of design and construction.

Great fairytales are full of suspense and emotional ups and downs, with the hero or heroine fighting and then overcoming antagonists and obstacles. The bigger the difficulties and the greater the suspense, the more interesting the story. Cinderella had no clothes, no carriage, and a rigid deadline. She had lost her shoe. Cinderella was sad, then happy because of the fairy Godmother, then scared again when the clock struck 12. An interviewee faced an employer going bankrupt, saw her superiors resign, and was left with a weak team. Both of these examples have a central character: Cinderella and the interviewee. Audiences generally identify more with people and characters in the stories than with abstract discussion. In business storytelling, when there is no one central character, characters can be woven into the body of the story. For example: "In the next 10 minutes, I will show you five reasons why our business will disappear within five years if we continue with business as usual." Then, one reason could include the story of how a big customer was disappointed and another reason could include the story of how a group of salesmen felt helpless.

Throughout history, people have pooled their resources to varying degrees in order to enjoy the benefits and manage the risks ① that come from living in large groups. These benefits include specialisation of labour, mutual defence and shared infrastructure. As groups get larger — from family to village to major cities and nation states — the mutual obligations become more ② abstract and are often mediated through institutions and the political process. Rather than ‘owe’ something to our family or community, our obligations morph into solidarity with fellow citizens or duty to our country. In the past, for example, families educated their children, cared for the sick and unemployed at home; today most rely on schools, medical facilities and (in some countries) unemployment benefits ③ paid by the state. That is why today people are expected to contribute to the common good when they are productive adults and, in exchange, ④ get an education when they are young and support when they are sick, unemployed or old. Natural processes in soils in many places on the planet concentrate potentially hazardous geologic materials.

- (A) The health hazards posed by these elements depend on the way humans interact with their environment, which can vary significantly among different cultures. Primitive cultures that live off the land are more susceptible to hazards and diseases associated with contaminated or poor water quality, toxic elements in plants harvested from contaminated soils, and insect- and animal-borne diseases associated with unsanitary environments.
- (B) For instance, schistosomiasis-bearing snails are abundant in parts of Africa and Asia where natural waters are rich in calcium derived from soils, but in similar climates in South America, the condition is rare. It is thought that this difference is because the waters in South America are calcium-poor, whereas disease-bearing snails need calcium to build their shells.
- (C) In contrast, more developed societies are more likely to be affected by air pollution, different types of water pollution, and indoor pollution such as radon exposure. Some diseases reflect a complex interaction among humans, insects or animals, climate, and the natural concentration of certain elements in the environment.

The United States lags in some sustainability indicators because it has already developed unsustainably. Leapfrogging allows developing countries to skip the implementation of old, inefficient technologies used in developed countries, thereby (A) the environmentally harmful stages of economic development. For example, developing countries can build mobile phone networks that require much less raw materials and construction than land lines. They can deploy decentralized renewable energy systems such as PV panels, while in the United States we will be stuck for some time with old coal-fired power plants and an aging, inefficient electrical grid. Gifts are one way of defining a private world of love and ritual which is different from, and in contrast to, the impersonal capitalist economy. Yet gift giving in modern society is affected by that economy. This is most obvious in the case of monetary gifts, 그것의 가치는 전적으로 시장에서 물건을 구매하는 능력에 달려 있다. However, it also exists in the case of gifts of things where those gifts consist, as most do, of things that are purchased. There is a problem here. In advanced capitalist societies, _____ by individuals of things that they do not produce is a massive activity. There is a danger here that purchased gifts will lose their significance in the face of all the things that individuals purchase for themselves. Gift giving separates a world of love and ritual from the capitalist economy, but in the end the two systems of meaning cannot be entirely separated because they are interconnected.

Such visions will show the potential for reconnection (A) to bring about not just planetary health, but also personal well-being, joy, health and flourishing. In cultures based on a rigid social hierarchy, with strict adherence to rules, visual art tends to adopt well-ordered, conventional, rigid and stereotypical forms. Ancient Egyptian art does not attempt to depict depth or distance, or the layout of objects in a scene. The same drawing system persisted for almost 3,000 years. Objects were arranged in a flat picture plane along lines drawn on walls. Objects and their parts were observed with great precision, but depicted in a way that conveyed shape in the most simplified manner. In human figures the torso was drawn from the front, but the head, waist and limbs were drawn in profile. Medieval artists 자연계를 정확하게 표현하는 것에 대한 이집트인들의 꺼림을 부활시켰다, favouring instead depictions of the human form that conform to a strict formula involving expressionless, flat figures without individuality. This system of depiction was driven by religious concerns to avoid glorifying the attributes of individuals and their unique viewpoint on the world. There was little attempt to portray realistic depth, and the depicted stature of figures tended to reflect their social status.

The search for publicity is, at heart, a quest for a shortcut to friendship. Yet real kindness is never available in a public sphere. It is the fruit of a few intimate and reciprocal connections. It cannot be won remotely or one-sidedly. If it is safety one seeks, one must definitively and immediately cease to strive (A) to know to people one doesn't know and concentrate instead on building up genuine bonds that can survive one's errors and endure for life. Paradoxically and poignantly, it is most often the very anxious (B) what feel a particular longing for the embrace of fame; but it is especially they (given their fragility) who should be warned away from its ultimately always revengeful arms. Being entirely forgotten by the world is no curse or sign of failure; it is the very basis for a contented and safe life (C) which one swaps the prospect of followers and mean-minded detractors for the deeper satisfaction of true friends.

It is important to understand the distinction between indicators of market or nonmarket activity and well-defined measures of benefit or cost. While economic values are often related to human activities, simple indicators viewed in ① isolation (e.g., number of beach visits) can sometimes provide misleading perspectives. For example, simple activity indicators ② reflect values realized by nonusers or benefits related to unmeasured activities (i.e., activities not captured by the indicator in question). Because of these and other limitations, indicators of economic activity sometimes increase due to ③ negative changes in the environment. 오염으로 인해 지역의 A 해수욕장이 폐쇄되면 더 많은 사람이 이웃한 오염되지 않은 B 해수욕장을 방문하게 된다고 가정해 보라. An analyst looking solely at visitor numbers for beach B might incorrectly conclude that this represents a ④ positive change at beach B, when in fact more visitors to beach B simply reflects the closure of beach A (a substitute beach). Using the appropriate economic frameworks for analysis can prevent such ⑤ misleading conclusions. Simple behavioral (and other) indicators can sometimes provide a cost-effective means to help guide policy — but they can also contribute to incorrect conclusions if not paired with more comprehensive economic analysis.

When you look at the photos of an expert like Malick Sidibé, you are looking at a small fraction of the portraits he chose (A) showing his viewers. Photos with closed eyes, crooked clothing, unflattering expressions, or those with a poor exposure, were surely edited out and hidden from his audience. Street photographers like Joel Meyerowitz make thousands of photos that are never seen by fans. His discriminating eye chooses exactly what he wants his audience to see. Any digital image that doesn't meet Meyerowitz's personal expectations is put in a folder that may never be (B) opening again. Most of the photographs anyone makes will likely end up in a digital junk heap on a forgotten hard drive. The point is that photographers put a lot of creative energy, time, and expense into making photographs, most of which don't represent the quality the creator expects. Yet, those hidden photos are critically important to the process of image-making. They represent the stages of failure and experimentation (C) need to arrive at a creative breakthrough. Plans need to have a degree of flexibility under changing circumstances, but settling on clear deadlines and tasks helps to avoid opening up the problematic flexibility that 지연을 그것과는 다른 어떤 것으로 해석할 수 있는 길을 열어 줄 수 있는. To take an illustration from the context of health, consider Gary, who has noticed that he has been getting colds quite frequently and thinks that it would be good to make an appointment with a primary care physician soon to get some medical tests done. And yet, he finds himself putting it off. Gary thinks of himself as conscientious and certainly not someone who would fail to take care of himself. As he considers, at a certain point, whether to phone the doctor or put it off for a day, the lack of specificity in his intention affords him plenty of wiggle room for thinking that he is still going to make the appointment “soon.” In such contexts, by entering into his calendar a specific time for making the call and an automatic reminder, Gary can create an attentional structure that makes it difficult for him to _____ the fact that failing to make the call at the appointed time is a case of delay.

Even the care we take for nature is motivated by a certain goal-oriented striving under the heading of “conservation.” We treat nature as a scarce resource to be preserved for the health of the planet and the security of future generations. But 우리는 자연 그 자체를 위해 자연의 진가를 인정하고 보호하려는 시도를 거의 하지 않는다, as a source of wonder and awe in the face of which we stand to gain new perspectives on ourselves and the goals we pursue. When pressed to articulate why biodiversity matters, for example, we turn almost automatically to some account of how, when one species goes extinct, others will suffer, including, in the end, ourselves. Sport does not require architecture. A field can serve as the grounds for footraces, ball games, and other modes of sporting activity. Early football games in England famously, or perhaps notoriously, took place without (A) fixing dimensions and across the townscape. Swimming, boating, surfing all can take place in natural, undesigned sites. The exterior wall of a building can be the backboard for handball or tennis. Nevertheless, the architecture of sport stretches back through history to the earliest exemplars of built forms. This is notable for both (a) and (b) reasons. In order to design and build sport architecture, there must already be in place some degree of codification of the rules of the game (B) to play and the minimum spatial dimensions necessary to undertake that activity. Thus the precursor of our modern stadia, the stadion, was both the place where a footrace was run and a unit of measurement. Sport architecture therefore emerges at the intersection of the codification of the rules of various games and (C) mean and mode of design and construction.

Great fairytales are full of suspense and emotional ups and downs, with the hero or heroine fighting and then overcoming antagonists and obstacles. The bigger the difficulties and the greater the suspense, ① the more interesting the story. Cinderella had no clothes, no carriage, and a rigid deadline. She had lost her shoe. Cinderella was sad, then happy because of the fairy Godmother, then ② scaring again when the clock struck 12. An interviewee faced an employer going bankrupt, saw her superiors resign, and was left with a weak team. Both of these examples ③ has a central character: Cinderella and the interviewee. Audiences generally identify more with people and characters in the stories than with abstract discussion. In business storytelling, when there is no one central character, characters can be woven into the body of the story. For example: "In the next 10 minutes, I will show you ④ five reasons why our business will disappear within five years if we continue with business as usual." Throughout history, people have pooled their resources to varying degrees in order to enjoy the benefits and manage the risks that come from living in large groups. These benefits include specialisation of labour, mutual defence and shared infrastructure. As groups get larger — from family to village to major cities and nation states — the mutual obligations become more abstract and are often _____ through institutions and the political process. Rather than ‘owe’ something to our family or community, our obligations morph into solidarity with fellow citizens or duty to our country. In the past, for example, families educated their children, cared for the sick and unemployed at home; today most rely on schools, medical facilities and (in some countries) unemployment benefits paid by the state. That is why today people are expected to contribute to the common good when they are productive adults and, in exchange, get an education when they are young and support when they are sick, unemployed or old. The exact nature of these expectations varies according to the cultural norms, institutions, policies and laws that define the rights and obligations of individuals relative to those of the wider society, but the existence of such expectations is universal.

Natural processes in soils in many places on the planet concentrate potentially hazardous geologic materials. The health hazards posed by these elements depend on (A) the way how humans interact with their environment, which can vary significantly among different cultures. Primitive cultures that live off the land are more susceptible to hazards and diseases associated with contaminated or poor water quality, toxic elements in plants harvested from contaminated soils, and insect- and animal-borne diseases associated with unsanitary environments. In contrast, 더 선진화된 사회는 대기 오염, 갖가지 종류의 수질 오염, 그리고 라돈 노출과 같은 실내 오염에 영향을 받을 가능성이 더 크다. Some diseases reflect a complex interaction among humans, insects or animals, climate, and the natural concentration of certain elements in the environment. For instance, schistosomiasis-bearing snails are abundant in parts of Africa and Asia (B) which natural waters are rich in calcium derived from soils, but in similar climates in South America, the condition is rare. The United States ① lags in some sustainability indicators because it has already developed unsustainably. It's easier to start from scratch and develop sustainably than to fix all of the mistakes we've made. It will be very expensive to rebuild our infrastructure to be more sustainable. For example, ③ developing countries can build mobile phone networks that require much less raw materials and construction than land lines. They can deploy decentralized renewable energy systems such as PV panels, while in the United States we will be stuck for some time with old coal-fired power plants and an aging, inefficient electrical grid. U.S. cities and suburbs were built when energy was cheap and there were no concerns about global warming, so we are ④ free to drive great distances to accomplish everyday tasks. The debate about how to understand social life 고대에 기원을 두고 있고 적어도 플라톤까지 멀리 거슬러 올라갈 수 있는데, who analyzed the differing worldviews of poetry and philosophy (which was at the time an approximation of science). Echoes of this debate are still heard today in the endless dialogue between the humanities and the sciences regarding how the world may best be comprehended. Some thinkers argue that the internal states of humans cannot be examined scientifically at all and must instead be understood nonscientifically via intuitive, interpretive, or even religious methods. Even some scientists devoted to strong empiricism adopt this view. B. F. Skinner, the leading twentieth-century advocate of behaviorism and the author of Walden Two, famously reasoned that internal mental states are unobservable and unquantifiable subjectivities and thus belong outside the range of objective scientific scrutiny, in contrast to observable (individual and collective) behaviors. Some philosophers and theologians continue to embrace the age-old dualistic separation between the material world and the mental world. The underlying claim is that we cannot use science to fully understand the soul or even feelings, thoughts, morals, or beauty. While the issue of the soul is a matter unto itself, feelings, thoughts, morals, and even beauty — and their evolutionary origins — are, in fact, yielding increasingly to science in the twenty-first century with techniques as diverse as MRI imaging and behavior genetics.

Emily was the youngest of three daughters in a family of great soccer players. Her mother played soccer in high school and college, as did her two older sisters. Following in their footsteps, Emily began her freshman year of high school as a star player on the soccer team. Soon, however, Emily's coach noticed that while Emily had great skills, she just didn't show the kind of passion for the game she had seen in other great players she'd coached. She noticed something else about Emily: she had an unusually graceful stride as she ran up and down the field.

And to her coach's surprise, Emily seemed to absolutely love the running drills that the other players hated during practice. One day, the coach called her over after practice. "Emily, why do you play soccer?" she asked. Somewhat puzzled, she responded, "Because everyone in my family plays soccer. And because I'm really good at it." Then the coach asked, "But do you love it?"

With a somewhat dejected look, she shook her head. "Playing soccer was really fun when I was younger. But now it feels like something I have to do. Everyone expects me to be like my mom and sisters. I don't want to let them down." That's when she realized that her job as Emily's coach had, in an important way, just begun. Rather than continue to try to get her to fit in as a soccer player, the coach asked Emily about her true interests. She wasn't surprised to learn that Emily had a passion for running. Running was effortless for her, she said. When running long distances, she felt relaxed and free from all the worries and cares in her life.

After several more conversations with Emily and then an initially difficult discussion with her family, the coach and her family allowed Emily to leave the soccer team and switch to running track for the spring semester. By her junior year, Emily was the number one runner on the girls' cross-country team, and as a senior, she led the team to the state finals. While she lost one of her better ① 필리핀 독수리는 필리핀의 숲에서 산다. ② 그것은 날개의 폭이 7피트가 넘는, 세계에서 가장 희귀하고 강한 새 중 하나이다. ③ 그것의 주식은 원숭이와 중간 크기의 포유동물인데, 이 사실로 ‘원숭이를 먹는 독수리’라는 두 번째 이름을 얻었다. ④ 그것은 산꼭대기에서 시작하여 나무에서 나무로 내려오면서 낮 동안 사냥한다. ⑤ 이렇게 하면, 날개를 퍼덕거릴 필요가 없기 때문에 에너지를 절약하면서, 한 곳에서 다른 곳으로 날아올 수 있다. ⑥ 가끔 독수리 두 마리가 함께 사냥을 하곤 하는데, 한 마리는 원숭이 무리의 주의를 분산시키기 위해서 머리 위로 활공하고, 그 동안에 다른 한 마리는 사냥감을 잡으려고 급습하여 들어온다. ⑦ 서식지 파괴로 인해, 필리핀 독수리는 심각한 멸종 위기에 처해 있는데, 야생에서 남은 것은 750마리가 채 안 된다. ⑧ 짝짓기를 하는 쌍은 2년마다 새끼 한 마리만 가져서 개체 수의 회복을 더디게 한다. ⑨ 다행히도, 독수리의 유일한 포식자로 알려진 것은 인간이다. ⑩ 이 새들은 1995년부터 필리핀의 국조로 보호되어 왔다. ⑪ 한 마리를 죽이면 징역 12년형의 처벌을 받을 수 있다!

① 사람들은 균형 잡힌 식단을 얻기 위해 다양한 재료를 섭취한다. ② 그럼에도 불구하고, 사람들은 같은 것에 싫증을 느낄 수 있고 호기심으로 인해 새로운 맛과 질감을 경험하고 싶어 한다. ③ 이 미각 딜레마는 포유류 역사 전반에 걸쳐 발생해 왔는데 인간이 많은 거주 환경에 적응하도록 진화했기 때문이다. ④ 인간은 잡식 동물이다. ⑤ 잡식성이 되는 데는 탐색과 혁신이 필요하다. ⑥ 그러나 Paul Rozin이 생각하듯이, 새롭고 익숙하지 않은 음식이 역겨울지 맛있을지 알지 못하므로 그것을 먹는 데 대한 두려움 때문에, 탐색과 시험은 불안으로 이어질 수도 있다. ⑦ Rozin은 인간(그리고 쥐!)이 새로운 음식을 섭취하는 것에 대해 반감을 가지고 있지만, 동시에 그렇게 하려는 욕구가 있다는 음식 선택의 이 가설에 관한 글을 썼다. ⑧ 그는 인지 부조화의 한 형태로, 우리의 음식 선택 습관을 둘러싼 역설이 있다는 점을 제시한다. ⑨ 우리가 생존에 필요한 것보다 점점 더 다양한 음식을 먹게 되면서, 이 딜레마는 인간을 생명 유지의 필수 요소 이상으로 먹도록 몰아간다.

① One of the earliest experiments investigating the distortions caused by categorization was a simple study in which subjects were asked to estimate the lengths of a set of eight line segments. ② The longest of those lines was 5 percent longer than the next in the bunch, which, in turn, was 5 percent longer than the third longest, and so on. ③ The researchers asked half their subjects to estimate the lengths of each of the lines, in centimeters. ④ But before asking the other subjects to do the same, they artificially grouped the lines into two sets — the longer four lines were labeled “Group A,” the shorter four labeled “Group B.” ⑤ The experimenters found that once the lines were thought of as belonging to a group, the subjects perceived them differently. ⑥ They judged the lines within each group as being closer in length to one another than they really were, and the length difference between the two groups as being greater than it actually was.

① 범주화로 인한 왜곡을 연구한 가장 초창기의 실험 중 하나는 피험자에게 한 묶음으로 된 여덟 개의 끈 토막의 길이를 추정하도록 요청한 간단한 연구였다. ② 그중 가장 긴 줄은 그 꾸러미에 있는 다음 줄보다 5퍼센트 더 길었고, 그것은 다시 세 번째 긴 끈보다 5퍼센트 더 길었으며, 그런 식으로 계속되었다. ③ 연구원들은 피험자 절반에게 각 끈의 길이를 센티미터 단위로 추정하도록 요청했다. ④ 하지만 다른 피험자들에게 똑같이 하도록 요청하기 전에, 그들은 인위적으로 끈을 두 묶음으로 분류했는데, 더 긴 네 개의 끈은 ‘그룹 A’로 불렸고, 더 짧은 네 개는 ‘그룹 B’로 불렸다. ⑤ 실험자들은 그 끈이 어떤 그룹에 속한다고 생각되면, 그 피험자들은 그것들을 다르게 인식한다는 것을 발견했다. ⑥ 그들은 각 그룹 내의 끈이 실제로보다 길이가 서로 더 비슷하고, 두 그룹 간의 길이 차이는 실제로 더 크다고 판단했다.

소재: 사회 공학의 위험성

정답 및 해설 p.54

① Social engineering is a method of gaining access to systems, data, or buildings through the exploitation of the human psychology.
 ② As foolish as it may sound, some companies and organizations think that they are resistant to the threat of social engineering.
 ③ On the contrary, no organization is immune to social engineering, not even the White House or any other prominent system. ④ For instance, a contest was held at a security conference wherein the participants were asked to obtain information from target companies, which could be utilized for a hypothetical attack. ⑤ Out of the 140 phone calls that were made to employees of the target companies, almost all the employees divulged information except for five, who refused to give out anything. ⑥ In addition, 90% of the employees clicked on a URL, which was sent to them by the participants.
 ⑦ These employees did not even bother knowing the person who sent it. ⑧ This security conference concluded on how wide and dangerous the scope of social engineering is for all systems and organizations.

① 사회 공학은 인간의 심리를 이용하여 시스템, 정보, 또는 건물에 접근하는 방법이다.

① 대개 성격에 미치는 주요한 환경적 영향은 한 개인의 어린 시절 동안 발생하므로, 상황을 고치기 위해서는 타임머신이 필요할 텐데, 영화 *Back to the Future*를 생각해 보라. ② 또한 후천성은 성향을 두드러지게 하거나 기존의 잠재력을 향상시키면서 선천성과 함께 작용하는 경우가 아주 흔하다. ③ 예를 들어, 야심을 가진 사람들은 경쟁하는 직업을 갖는 경향이 있고, 그들의 직업이 더 경쟁적으로 될수록 그들은 결과적으로 더 야심을 가지게 되는 경향이 있다. ④ 마찬가지로 외향적인 사람들은 많은 인적 네트워크 형성과 개인 간의 한담을 나누는 것을 필요로 하는 직업을 선택할 수도 있다. ⑤ 하지만 그러한 직업에 대한 적응은 그들의 외향성을 훨씬 더 증가시키는 경향이 있다. ⑥ 그래서 재능과 관련된 특성을 포함하여 개인적 자질은 항상 선천성과 후천성 양쪽 모두에 의해서, 하지만 흔히 같은 방향으로 영향을 받는데, 후천성이 결국 이미 처음부터 존재했던 특성을 증폭했던 방식이다. ⑦ 그런 면에서 사람들은 더 많이 변할수록 그만큼 더 자신처럼 된다. ⑧ 대체로, 우리가 나이가 들면서 우리는 모두 우리의 초기 모습의 부풀려진 형태가 된다.

① Some experts argue that until the world's distribution of wealth is altered, population will not be controlled. ② For example, Piel proposed that population control closely follows economic development, which enables people to escape from the poverty cycle. ③ In other words, as poverty lessens, birth rates also decrease because women have better educational and professional opportunities as well as access to birth control. ④ Lowered infant mortality accompanies economic development, and improved nutrition and medical care also helps to reduce birth rates. ⑤ But unfortunately, poverty has been growing. ⑥ More than one billion people in the world live in desperate poverty without the basic resources of clean water, adequate food, shelter, or sanitation. ⑦ Even in developed countries such as the United States, more than one person in nine (11.3%) fell below the official poverty line in 2000. ⑧ If current practices continue, one half of the world's population will live in absolute poverty by 2050, meaning too poor to grow or buy enough food, or maintain a job.

① 몇몇 전문가들은 세계의 부의 분배가 바뀌기 전까지는 인구가 억제되지 않을 것이라고 주장한다. ② 예를 들어, Piel은 인구 억제가 경제 발전을 밀접하게 뒤따르는데, 이것은 사람들이 빈곤의 순환에서 벗어날 수 있게 해 준다고 제안했다. ③ 다시 말해서, 빈곤이 줄어들수록 출산율도 감소하는데, 이는 여성들이 피임을 더 쉽게 이용하는 것과 더불어 더 나은 교육 및 직업의 기회를 가지기 때문이다. ④ 영아 사망률 저하가 경제 발전에 동반되며, 영양과 의료 서비스의 개선 또한 출산율을 낮추는데 도움이 된다. ⑤ 하지만 불행하게도, 빈곤은 증가해 오고 있다. ⑥ 세계의 10억이 넘는 사람들이 깨끗한 물, 적절한 음식, 주거지, 또는 위생 시설이라는 기초 자원 없이 극심한 빈곤 속에서 살고 있다. ⑦ 심지어 미국과 같은 선진국에서도, 2000년에 9명 중 1명이 넘는 수(11.3퍼센트)가 공식적인 빈곤선 아래로 떨어졌다. ⑧ 만약 현재의 관행이 계속된다면, 세계 인구의 절반이 2050년이 되면 절대적 빈곤 속에서 살게 될 것이고, 이것은 너무 가난해서 충분한 식량을 재배하거나 구입할 수 없는 것 혹은 직업을 유지할 수 없는 것을 의미한다.

Some experts argue that until the world's distribution of wealth is altered, population will not be controlled. For example, Piel proposed that population control closely follows ① _____ (경제 발전), which enables people to escape from the poverty cycle. ② _____ (다시 말해서), as poverty lessens, birth rates also decrease because women have better educational and professional opportunities as well as access to birth control. Lowered infant mortality accompanies economic development, and improved nutrition and medical care also helps to reduce birth rates. But unfortunately, poverty has been growing. ③ _____ (10억이 넘는) people in the world live in ④ _____ (극심한 빈곤) without the basic resources of clean water, adequate food, shelter, or sanitation. Even in developed countries ⑤ _____ (~와 같은) the United States, more than one person in nine (11.3%) fell below the official poverty line in 2000. If current practices continue, one half of the world's population will live in absolute poverty by 2050, meaning too poor to grow or buy enough food, or maintain a job.

① 한없이 재미있는 자신의 책 A Mathematician Plays the Stock Market(수학자, 주식 시장을 가지고 놀다)에서 John Allen Paulos는 우리가 확률이 반반으로 보이는 게임의 결과에서 우연이 행하는 역할을 잘못 이해하는 경향이 있다고 지적한다. ② 두 사람이-George Soros와 George Bozos라고 부르겠는데-공정한 동전을 각각 1,000번 던지며 누가 가장 많은 앞면을 낼 수 있는지 보기 위해 겨룬다고 상상해 보라. ③ 우리는 그렇게 많은 던지기 후에 Soros와 Bozos가 각각 약 500번의 앞면과 500번의 뒷면을 얻어서 결과가 거의 항상 매우 대등하게 나올 것이라고 상상하는 경향이 있다. ④ 우리는 그 결론으로부터 만약 선수 중 한 명이 다른 한 명보다 실제로 훨씬 앞서게 된다면, 그 결과는 틀림없이 불공정한 동전이나 선수 중 한 명의 특별한 기술 때문일 것이라고 추론한다. ⑤ 실제로는, Paulos가 지적하는 것처럼, 1,000번의 공정한 동전의 던지기 후에 Soros 또는 Bozos가 가령 475번의 앞면에 비하여 525번의 앞면을 던져서 상대방보다 훨씬 앞서 있을 확률이 훨씬 더 크다. ⑥ 우리는 이것을 작은 수의 법칙이라고 부를 수도 있을 것이다. ⑦ 바꾸어 말하면, 1,000번의 던지기가 많은 것처럼 보일 수 있지만, 그것은 실제로 Soros와 Bozos가 대등하게 끝날 것이라는 것을 확실하게 하기에 충분한 관찰이 아니다. ⑧ 따라서 만약 10,000명의 사람이 모두 공정한 동전을 1,000번 던진다면 합한 결과는 상당한 수의 사람이 꽤 좋은 기록으로 끝날, 그리고 같은 수의 사람이 꽤 아쉬운 기록으로 끝날 경향을 보일 것이다. ⑨ 극소수는 굉장한 기록을 낼 것이고 극소수는 최악의 기록을 낼 것이다. ⑩ 우리가 예상할 수 있는 것보다 훨씬 더 적은 사람들이 반반의 기록을 낼 것이다.

Imagine that two people — I will call them George Soros and George Bozos — flip a fair coin 1,000 times each, competing to see who can ❷ _____ (~을 내놓다) the most heads. We tend to imagine that, after that many flips, the outcome would almost always come out very even, with Soros and Bozos each getting about 500 heads and 500 tails. We ❸ _____ (~로부터 추론하다) that conclusion that if one of the players actually ends up well ahead of the other, that outcome must be due either to an unfair coin or to the special skill of one of the players.

In fact, as Paulos points out, there is a ❹ _____ (훨씬 더 큰 확률) that after 1,000 fair coin flips, Soros or Bozos would be well ahead of the other, having flipped 525 heads to, say, 475 heads. We might call this the law of small numbers; that is, 1,000 flips may seem like a lot, but actually it's not enough observations to ensure that Soros and Bozos will come out even. Thus, if 10,000 people all flipped a fair coin 1,000 times, the aggregate results would tend to be that a goodly number would ❺ _____ (결국 ~하게 되다) pretty good records and an equal number would end up with pretty sorry records. A very few would have spectacular records and a very few would have abysmal records. Far less than we might expect would have even records.

Your insurance adjuster recently submitted the assessment for the wind damage to our roof. There are specific ① errors within the claim that you need to address. The damage was to the dormer on the north side of the house. High winds from last month's storms had lifted many of the tiles from the roof and caused a leak. This caused ② water damage to the internal ceiling of an upstairs bedroom. When the adjuster examined the dormer, he looked only at the roofing on the dormer's south side, where damage was ③ maximal. The true damage was on the north side. He awarded damages based on what he saw, and it seems that he did not look very closely at the ④ extent of the damage. A specialist from Caesar Roofing estimates repairs to both the roof and the water-damaged ceiling at $968. Your check for $232 arrived today. They shared an excellent safe cake recipe, and provided a host of other support.

In 2004, my son Noah was turning one year old and I had a problem: How do I make him a birthday cake? He was seriously allergic to dairy, soy, and egg. A memory of an incident unsettled me — a bite of bakery cake at daycare sent us to the emergency room. I had never made a birthday cake myself. But Noah was turning one — I wanted him to have birthday cake. (①) I found a website called foodallergickids.org, and asked on the forum there: Did anyone have a dairy-, soy- and egg-free cake recipe? (②) In response to my question, I got a shower of warm welcomes from parents on the site. (③) Parents on the site helped me figure out how to make a clear and effective allergy-awareness sheet for his daycare teachers. (④) They shared tips for how to safely order food in a restaurant. (⑤) Their experience was invaluable, and they also were emotionally supportive in a way no one else could be.

It is rumored that Michael Jordan practiced more than anyone else, was always up for another practice game, or a card game, a round of golf, shooting baskets far into the night while his teammates were done and gone. Ericsson and Pool reference this continued energy as maintenance, yet in light of Jordan's remarkable level of energy throughout the night following a demanding game, it was far beyond maintenance. It was self-energizing and self-renewing. It was a self-fulfilling prophecy that flowed like a humming mantra: "The more one does, the more one can do." To put this into terms for energizing the students in our classrooms, it is easy to rally students with a similar trigger. By planning a show or exhibition of their work or a demonstration of their performances, students are motivated with renewed energy as they prepare to showcase their work. The invitation to show their artwork, or perform in the PE demonstration, or participate in the school musical performance or the school poetry fest seems to do the trick. I have been teaching a course on leadership for many years and have concluded that the main way you can distinguish good from not so good leaders is in who they are looking out for. Bad leaders always have one person in mind — themselves. They may say they care about others; they may do things that seem to show care for others; they even may appear to be sad when hearing about the misfortunes of others. But in the end, they always look out for #1 — themselves. When they help others, it is to help themselves or merely to demonstrate overtly but _____ how caring and considerate they are. When they listen to others, it is to figure out what's in it for them. When they act in ways to benefit others, they always have themselves in mind first. Just as criminologists sometimes say that to figure out the perpetrators of a crime, you should follow the money, to figure out who is a good leader, you should follow the benefits — whom is the leader trying to benefit, and in particular, is it anyone beyond him- or herself, or those who immediately can benefit him- or herself?

In Ise, Japan, the Shinto Grand Shrine is disassembled every twenty years and an exact replica, rebuilt of similar materials, is assembled in the same place. In this form of preservation, perpetuating the building techniques and the ritual act of re-creation matters more than the physical continuity of the structure. Similarly, the ancient White Horse of Uffington in England was “re-created” for centuries by locals, who scraped the chalk figure every seven years to keep it from being obscured by growing vegetation. Likewise, cultures that rely on oral traditions retain their sense of cultural heritage without any tangible objects at all, but rather by retelling stories from the past. The Philippine eagle lives in the forests of the Philippines. It is one of the rarest and most powerful birds in the world, with a wingspan of over 7 feet. Its main diet is monkeys and medium-sized mammals, a fact that has earned it a second name, “monkey-eating eagle.” It hunts during the day, beginning at the top of a mountain and moving down from tree to tree. This allows it to soar from one location to another, conserving energy since it doesn’t have to flap its wings. Two eagles will sometimes hunt together, one soaring overhead to distract a group of monkeys while the other swoops in for the kill. Because of habitat destruction, the Philippine eagle is critically endangered, with fewer than 750 left in the wild. Mating pairs have only one chick every two years, making the population slow to recover. Luckily, the only known predators of the eagle are humans. The birds have been protected as the national bird of the Philippines since 1995. Killing one is punishable by 12 years in jail!

People consume a range of ingredients to attain a balanced diet. And yet, people can tire of the sameness and out of curiosity desire to experience new tastes and textures. This taste dilemma has developed throughout mammalian history, as humans evolved to adapt to many habitats. Humans are omnivores. Being omnivorous requires exploration and innovation. Yet, as Paul Rozin sees it, exploration and testing can lead to anxiety because of a fear of eating new, foreign food, not knowing whether it will be disgusting or tasty. Rozin has written about this hypothesis of food selection that humans (and rats!) have an aversion to consuming new foods yet at the same time have a drive to do so. He proposes that there is a(n) _____ surrounding our food choice habits, a form of cognitive dissonance. This dilemma drives humans to eat beyond our biological imperative as we eat more and more variety than is needed for survival.

Like an addiction to anything, when the craving for certainty is met, there is a sensation of reward. At low levels, for example, when predicting where your foot will land as you walk, the reward is often unnoticeable (except when your foot doesn't land the way you predicted, which equates with uncertainty). The pleasure of prediction is more acute when you listen to music based on repeating patterns. The ability to predict, and then obtain data that meets those predictions, generates an overall toward response. It's part of the reason that games such as solitaire, Sudoku, and crossword puzzles are enjoyable. They give you a little rush from creating more certainty in the world, in a safe way. Entire industries are devoted to resolving larger uncertainties: from shop-front palm readers, to the mythical "black boxes" that can supposedly predict stock trends and make investors millions. Some parts of accounting and consulting make their money by helping executives experience a perception of increasing certainty, through strategic planning and "forecasting". While the financial markets of 2008 showed once again that the future is inherently uncertain, the one thing that's certain is that people will always pay lots of money at least to feel less uncertain. That's because uncertainty feels, to the brain, like a threat to your life.

One of the earliest experiments investigating the distortions caused by categorization ① was a simple study in which subjects were asked to estimate the lengths of a set of eight line segments. The longest of those lines was 5 percent longer than the next in the bunch, ② which, in turn, was 5 percent longer than the third longest, and so on. The researchers asked half their subjects ③ to estimate the lengths of each of the lines, in centimeters. But before asking the other subjects to do the same, they artificially grouped the lines into two sets — the longer four lines were labeled “Group A,” the shorter four labeled “Group B.” The experimenters found that once the lines were thought of as belonging to a group, the subjects ④ perceive them differently. They judged the lines within each group as ⑤ being closer in length to one another than they really were, and the length difference between the two groups as being greater than it actually was.

In my research with Liane Young and James Dungan of Boston College, we studied the effects of loyalty on people using Amazon’s Mechanical Turk, an online marketplace ① where users earn money for completing tasks. At the beginning of the study, we asked some participants to write an essay about loyalty and others to write about fairness. Later in the study, they were each exposed to poor work by someone else. Those who ② had received the loyalty nudge were less willing to blow the whistle on a fellow user for inferior performance. This finding complements research showing ③ that bribery is more common in countries that prize collectivism. The sense of group belonging and interdependence among members often ④ lead people to tolerate the offense. It makes them feel less accountable for it, ⑤ diffusing responsibility to the collective whole instead of assigning it to the individual. In short, empathy for those within one’s immediate circle can conflict with justice for all.

Social engineering is a method of gaining access to systems, data, or buildings through the exploitation of the human psychology. As foolish as it may sound, some companies and organizations think that they are resistant to the threat of social engineering. (①) On the contrary, no organization is immune to social engineering, not even the White House or any other prominent system. (②) For instance, a contest was held at a security conference wherein the participants were asked to obtain information from target companies, which could be utilized for a hypothetical attack. (③) Out of the 140 phone calls that were made to employees of the target companies, almost all the employees divulged information except for five, who refused to give out anything. (④) In addition, 90% of the employees clicked on a URL, which was sent to them by the participants. 밑줄 친 nurture to act in concert with nature가 다음 글에서 의미하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은?

More often than not, key environmental influences on personality occur during a person's early life, so it would require a time machine to fix things — think Back to the Future. It is also quite common for nurture to act in concert with nature, accentuating predispositions or enhancing existing potential. For example, ambitious people tend to have competitive jobs, and as their jobs become more competitive they tend to become more ambitious as a result. Likewise, extraverts may choose jobs that require a great deal of networking and interpersonal schmoozing. Yet adaptation to those jobs tends to increase their extraversion even further. And so personal qualities, including talent-related traits, are always influenced by both nature and nurture, but often in the same direction, such that nurture ends up amplifying characteristics that were already there to begin with. In that sense, the more people change, the more they become like themselves. By and large, as we grow older we all become exaggerated versions of our earlier selves.

*extravert 외향적인 사람 schmooze (환심을 사려고) 한담을 나누다

- ① One's potential can be developed through education.
- ② Cultivated traits are more powerful than genetic factors.
- ③ Genetically predetermined traits influence nonhereditary traits.

- ⑤ Genetics are in play with environmental factors in shaping a person.

People often confuse two different standards for thinking, which we might call the “good thinker” (active open-mindedness) and the “expert.” Because experts know the answer to most questions, they usually do not have to consider alternatives or counterevidence. If we admire experts, we may come to admire people who are “decisive” in the sense of being rigid. When a news commentator criticizes a political candidate for waffling and being unsure (as might befit a good thinker faced with many of the issues that politicians must face), the implication is that the candidate is not expert enough to have figured out the right answer. Similarly, a person who adopts a know-it-all tone — speaking without qualification or doubt — is giving a sign of expertise. Some parents (perhaps because they are experts about the matter under discussion) talk this way to their children, who come to think of it as a “grown-up” way to talk.

Any object will experience a temperature decrease if it emits more radiation than it absorbs. At night, the Earth's surface emits infra-red radiation, but since the Sun is not shining, it absorbs very ① little radiation (in fact, it only absorbs the infra-red that is emitted by the atmosphere downward toward the surface). Thus, the Earth's surface cools all night long. When the sun finally peaks over the horizon, the Earth is still ② emitting a good amount of infra-red radiation. In fact, it is still emitting more than it absorbs from the first faint rays of sunshine at dawn. Not until the incoming solar radiation grows larger, some time after sunrise, ③ do the incoming radiation finally equal the outgoing infra-red radiation. At that precise moment, the temperature ④ will have reached its minimum value, for in the next minute, the incoming solar radiation will be larger than the outgoing infra-red, and so absorption will exceed emission and the temperature will rise ⑤ as a consequence.

Some experts argue that until the world's distribution of wealth is altered, population will not be controlled. For example, Piel proposed that population control ① closely follows economic development, which enables people to escape from the poverty cycle. In other words, as poverty lessens, birth rates also decrease ② because women have better educational and professional opportunities as well as access to birth control. Lowered infant mortality accompanies economic development, and improved nutrition and medical care also helps ③ to reduce birth rates. But unfortunately, poverty has been growing. More than one billion people in the world ④ live in desperate poverty without the basic resources of clean water, adequate food, shelter, or sanitation. Even in developed countries such as the United States, more than one person in nine (11.3%) fell below the official poverty line in 2000. If current practices continue, one half of the world's population will live in absolute poverty by 2050, meaning too poor to grow or buy enough food, or ⑤ maintaining a job.

The introduction of digital technology has presented customers with transparency and new ways to search for information about products. Consumers are increasingly relying on online reviews on the internet or “word of mouth” from friends. The change in consumer behavior has likewise presented firms with a new way to connect with its customer base. Firms that are the most effective at connecting information regarding the customer's path to purchase (supporting the buying process) are able to position themselves strongly in the future market. Several large organizations have realized that competitive advantage is no longer derived from low cost or product differentiation. Instead, competitive advantage is gained and sustained through a platform offering a system of connected and complementary products that raise consumer's switching costs through strong network effects, meaning the higher the value of the platform is, the more people use it. Cultural values are fundamental within a workplace because they define the terms of the psychological contracts that an employee holds with the organization. ① Unlike formal contracts of employment, psychological contracts are unwritten, often unarticulated, and usually only exist as assumptions. ② In a culturally homogeneous setting, assumptions are generally understood and shared, so the psychological contracts in play may be relatively clear: rewards are dependent on how well you do, the employee expects to stay in the organization for many years or for just a few years, the corporate ethos reflects the ethos of that particular society, and so on. ③ However, in a culturally diverse workforce people may have very different expectations of the psychological contract. ④ Due to globalization and major advances in technology, such as the workforce being replaced by artificial intelligence, there has been a change in defining the importance of psychological contract. ⑤ For example, in some cultures an organization may reward people because of their family connections rather than on the basis of their performance, or, in the case of transnational corporations, the overall corporate ethos is very different to that of the host nation.

In his endlessly amusing book, A Mathematician Plays the Stock Market, John Allen Paulos points out that we tend to misunderstand the role chance plays in the (a) outcomes of apparently even games. Imagine that two people — I will call them George Soros and George Bozos — flip a fair coin 1,000 times each, competing to see who can come up with the most heads. We tend to imagine that, after that many flips, the outcome would almost always come out very (b) even, with Soros and Bozos each getting about 500 heads and 500 tails. We infer from that conclusion that if one of the players actually ends up well ahead of the other, that outcome must be due either to an unfair coin or to the special skill of one of the players.

In fact, as Paulos points out, there is a far greater (c) probability that after 1,000 fair coin flips, Soros or Bozos would be well ahead of the other, having flipped 525 heads to, say, 475 heads. We might call this the law of small numbers; that is, 1,000 flips may seem like a lot, but actually it's not (d) enough observations to ensure that Soros and Bozos will come out even. Thus, if 10,000 people all flipped a fair coin 1,000 times, the aggregate results would tend to be that a goodly number would end up with pretty good records and a (e) greater number would end up with pretty sorry records. A very few would have spectacular records and a very few would have abysmal records. Far less than we might expect would have even records.

Once, a girl in my class called Emma decided to do a research paper on a particular political group. Her father was an active member of the group, as she herself was soon to become, so this major research paper of hers was a rite of passage as well. Perhaps because I was so enthusiastic over her choice of a topic, she assumed I was also (a) sympathetic to her political point of view.

*rite of passage 통과 의례

(B)

I tried not only to help her see different points of view, but also to give depth to her own. To achieve that, I introduced her to the novels of Ayn Rand and a few other books. What I saw in this girl was the ability to believe in something more than survival, gratification, and success. It was her having some conviction, aside from any content of the conviction itself, that I strove to (b) reinforce. I think it was Toynbee who said that the values of Sparta and Valhalla are preferable to no values at all. And a misfired challenge to the young may be preferable to allowing their need for challenge and commitment to go unmet.

(C)

Almost conspiratorially she expressed to me her worries about a history teacher who would also be reading her paper and giving it a grade. "Ms. Maples is quite open about her political views, and hers differ from my father's, I am (c) excited how she'll mark my paper," she said. "As far as politics go," I told her, "mine are probably similar to those of Ms. Maples', and look how excited I am about your paper." I had meant to put her at ease, but my mistake was immediately (d) evident from the blood leaving her face. I smiled with great kindness. "It's going to be a wonderful paper," I said. It's going to be the end of my life, Emma thought. As to the final outcome, it was a wonderful paper, and working on it with her was the (e) beginning of one of the warmest relationships I ever enjoyed with a student.

In 2004, my son Noah was turning one year old and I had a problem: How do I make him a birthday cake? He was seriously allergic to dairy, soy, and egg. A memory of an incident unsettled me — a bite of bakery cake at daycare sent us to the emergency room. I had never made a birthday cake myself. But Noah was turning one — I wanted him to have birthday cake. I found a website called foodallergickids.org, and asked on the forum there: Did anyone have a dairy-, soy- and egg-free cake recipe? In response to my question, I got a shower of warm welcomes from parents on the site. They shared an excellent safe cake recipe, and provided a host of other support. Parents on the site helped me figure out how to make a clear and effective allergy-awareness sheet for his daycare teachers. They shared tips for how to safely order food in a restaurant. It was self-invigorating and self-renewing. It was a self-fulfilling prophecy that flowed like a humming mantra: "The more one does, the more one can do." To put this into terms for invigorating the students in our classrooms, it is easy to rally students with a similar trigger. People consume a range of ingredients to attain a balanced diet. And yet, people can tire of the sameness and out of curiosity desire to experience new tastes and textures. This taste dilemma has developed throughout mammalian history, as humans evolved to adapt to many habitats. Humans are omnivores. Being omnivorous requires exploration and innovation. Yet, as Paul Rozin sees it, exploration and testing can lead to anxiety because of a fear of eating new, foreign food, not knowing whether it will be disgusting or tasty. Rozin has written about this hypothesis of food selection that humans (and rats!) have an aversion to consuming new foods yet at the same time have a drive to do so. He proposes that there is a paradox surrounding our food choice habits, a form of cognitive dissonance. This dilemma drives humans to eat beyond our biological imperative as we eat more and more variety than is needed for survival.

Like an addiction to anything, when the craving for certainty is met, there is a sensation of reward. At low levels, for example, when predicting where your foot will land as you walk, the reward is often unnoticeable (except when your foot doesn't land the way you predicted, which equates with uncertainty). The pleasure of prediction is more acute when you listen to music based on repeating patterns. The ability to predict, and then obtain data that meets those predictions, generates an overall toward response. It's part of the reason that games such as solitaire, Sudoku, and crossword puzzles are enjoyable. They give you a little rush from creating more certainty in the world, in a safe way. Entire industries are devoted to resolving larger uncertainties: from shop-front palm readers, to the mythical "black boxes" that can supposedly predict stock trends and make investors millions. Some parts of accounting and consulting make their money by helping executives experience a perception of increasing certainty, through strategic planning and "forecasting". Yet adaptation to those jobs tends to increase their extraversion even further.

More often than not, key environmental influences on personality occur during a person's early life, so it would require a time machine to fix things — think Back to the Future. (①) It is also quite common for nurture to act in concert with nature, accentuating predispositions or enhancing existing potential. (②) For example, ambitious people tend to have competitive jobs, and as their jobs become more competitive they tend to become more ambitious as a result. (③) Likewise, extraverts may choose jobs that require a great deal of networking and interpersonal schmoozing. (④) And so personal qualities, including talent-related traits, are always influenced by both nature and nurture, but often in the same direction, such that nurture ends up amplifying characteristics that were already there to begin with. (⑤) In that sense, the more people change, the more they become like themselves. By and large, as we grow older we all become exaggerated versions of our earlier selves.

Any object will experience a temperature decrease if it emits more radiation than it absorbs. At night, the Earth's surface emits infra-red radiation, but since the Sun is not shining, it absorbs very little radiation (in fact, it only absorbs the infra-red that is emitted by the atmosphere downward toward the surface). Thus, the Earth's surface cools all night long. ① When the sun finally peaks over the horizon, the Earth is still emitting a good amount of infra-red radiation. ② Not only the Earth but other objects, including stars, emit and absorb radiation regardless of their temperature. ③ In fact, it is still emitting more than it absorbs from the first faint rays of sunshine at dawn. ④ Not until the incoming solar radiation grows larger, some time after sunrise, does the incoming radiation finally equal the outgoing infra-red radiation. ⑤ At that precise moment, the temperature will have reached its minimum value, for in the next minute, the incoming solar radiation will be larger than the outgoing infra-red, and so absorption will exceed emission and the temperature will rise as a consequence.

Some experts argue that until the world's distribution of wealth is altered, population will not be controlled. For example, Piel proposed that population control closely follows economic development, which enables people to escape from the poverty cycle. In other words, as poverty lessens, birth rates also decrease because women have better educational and professional opportunities as well as access to birth control. Lowered infant mortality accompanies economic development, and improved nutrition and medical care also helps to reduce birth rates. But unfortunately, poverty has been growing. More than one billion people in the world live in desperate poverty without the basic resources of clean water, adequate food, shelter, or sanitation. Even in developed countries such as the United States, more than one person in nine (11.3%) fell below the official poverty line in 2000. If current practices continue, one half of the world's population will live in absolute poverty by 2050, meaning too poor to grow or buy enough food, or maintain a job.

Adapted to life in the icy environment in the Antarctic Ocean, where their bodies are at the same glacial temperature as the seas around them, krill are reliant on an unusual internal chemistry. For instance, they possess some of the most powerful and unusual digestive enzymes known in nature. Enzymes are biological catalysts, vastly accelerating processes such as digestion. Our own enzyme processes, and those of most other animals, slow down dramatically as the temperature drops. Krill enzymes, though, have some extreme working conditions to cope with, and consequently, they've evolved to be superpowerful. The amazing characteristics of krill enzymes have recently been used for human medicine, to treat wounds and infections, bedsores, gastrointestinal disorders, and blood clots, to name but a few applications. Scientific advances on this scale are rare. When they do occur, it's amazing how often they emerge in the most unlikely circumstances, from research into what might be regarded as unpromising animals. It's another reason to make sure that we do our utmost not only to safeguard krill but to value all the biological wealth of the planet.

Cultural values are fundamental within a workplace because they define the terms of the psychological contracts that an employee holds with the organization. Unlike formal contracts of employment, psychological contracts are unwritten, often unarticulated, and usually only exist as assumptions. In a culturally homogeneous setting, assumptions are generally understood and shared, so the psychological contracts in play may be relatively clear: rewards are dependent on how well you do, the employee expects to stay in the organization for many years or for just a few years, the corporate ethos reflects the ethos of that particular society, and so on. However, in a culturally diverse workforce people may have very different _____. I have been teaching a course on leadership for many years and have concluded that the main way you can distinguish good from ① not so good leaders is in who they are looking out for. But in the end, they always look out for #1 — themselves. When they help others, it is to help themselves or merely to demonstrate ③ overtly but falsely how caring and considerate they are. When they listen to others, it is to figure out what's in it for them. When they act in ways to ④ harm others, they always have themselves in mind first. In Ise, Japan, the Shinto Grand Shrine is disassembled every twenty years and an exact replica, rebuilt of similar materials, is assembled in the same place. People consume a range of ingredients to attain a balanced diet. And yet, people can tire of the sameness and out of curiosity desire to experience new tastes and textures. This taste dilemma has developed throughout mammalian history, as humans evolved to adapt to many habitats. Humans are omnivores. Being omnivorous requires exploration and innovation. Yet, as Paul Rozin sees it, exploration and testing can lead to anxiety because of a fear of eating new, foreign food, not knowing whether it will be disgusting or tasty. Rozin has written about this hypothesis of food selection that humans (and rats!) have an aversion to consuming new foods yet at the same time have a drive to do so. He proposes that there is (A) a paradox surrounding our food choice habits, a form of cognitive dissonance. 우리가 생존에 필요한 것보다 점점 더 다양한 음식을 먹게 되면서, 이 딜레마는 인간을 생명 유지의 필수 요소 이상으로 먹도록 몰아간다.

Like an addiction to anything, when the craving for certainty is met, there is a sensation of ① reward. At low levels, for example, when predicting where your foot will land as you walk, the reward is often unnoticeable (except when your foot doesn't land the way you predicted, which equates with uncertainty). The pleasure of prediction is ② more acute when you listen to music based on repeating patterns. The ability to predict, and then obtain data that meets those predictions, generates an overall toward response. It's part of the reason that games such as solitaire, Sudoku, and crossword puzzles are enjoyable. They give you a ③ little rush from creating more certainty in the world, in a safe way. Entire industries are devoted to resolving larger uncertainties: from shop-front palm readers, to the mythical "black boxes" that can supposedly predict stock trends and make investors millions. Some parts of accounting and consulting make their money by helping executives experience a perception of ④ decreasing certainty, through strategic planning and "forecasting". Later in the study, they were each exposed to poor work by someone else. Those who had received the loyalty nudge were less willing to blow the whistle on a fellow user for inferior performance. This finding complements research showing that bribery is more common in countries that prize collectivism. The sense of group belonging and interdependence among members often leads people to tolerate the offense. It makes them feel less accountable for it, diffusing responsibility to the collective whole instead of assigning it to the individual. In short, empathy for those within one's immediate circle can conflict with justice for all.

More often than not, key environmental influences on personality occur during a person's early life, so it would require a time machine to fix things — think Back to the Future. It is also quite common for nurture to act in concert with nature, accentuating predispositions or enhancing existing potential. For example, ambitious people tend to have competitive jobs, and as their jobs become more competitive they tend to become more ambitious as a result. Likewise, extraverts may choose jobs that require a great deal of networking and interpersonal schmoozing. Yet adaptation to those jobs tends to increase their extraversion even further. And so personal qualities, including talent-related traits, are always influenced by both nature and nurture, but often in the same direction, such that 후천성은 결국 이미 처음부터 존재했던 특성을 증폭시키는 것으로 끝난다. In that sense, the more people change, the more they become like themselves. By and large, as we grow older we all become exaggerated versions of our earlier selves.

People often confuse two ① different standards for thinking, which we might call the “good thinker” (active open-mindedness) and the “expert.” Because experts know the answer to ② most questions, they usually do not have to consider alternatives or counterevidence. If we admire experts, we may come to admire people who are “decisive” in the sense of being ③ flexible. When a news commentator criticizes a political candidate for waffling and being unsure (as might befit a good thinker faced with many of the issues that politicians must face), the implication is that the candidate is not expert enough to have figured out the ④ right answer. Similarly, a person who adopts a ⑤ know-it-all tone — speaking without qualification or doubt — is giving a sign of expertise. Some parents (perhaps because they are experts about the matter under discussion) talk this way to their children, who come to think of it as a “grown-up” way to talk.

Any object will experience a temperature decrease if it emits ① more radiation than it absorbs. At night, the Earth’s surface emits infra-red radiation, but since the Sun is not shining, it absorbs very little radiation (in fact, it only absorbs the infra-red that is emitted by the atmosphere ② downward toward the surface). Thus, the Earth’s surface cools all night long. When the sun finally peaks over the horizon, the Earth is still emitting a ③ good amount of infra-red radiation. In fact, it is still emitting more than it absorbs from the first faint rays of sunshine at dawn. Not until the incoming solar radiation grows ④ smaller, some time after sunrise, does the incoming radiation finally equal the outgoing infra-red radiation. At that precise moment, the temperature will have reached its ⑤ minimum value, for in the next minute, the incoming solar radiation will be larger than the outgoing infra-red, and so absorption will exceed emission and the temperature will rise as a consequence.

Some experts argue that until the world's distribution of wealth is altered, population will not be controlled. For example, Piel proposed that population control closely follows economic development, which enables people to escape from the poverty cycle. In other words, as poverty lessens, birth rates also decrease because women have better educational and professional opportunities as well as access to birth control. Lowered infant mortality accompanies economic development, and improved nutrition and medical care also helps to reduce birth rates. But unfortunately, poverty has been growing. More than one billion people in the world live in desperate poverty without the basic resources of clean water, adequate food, shelter, or sanitation. Even in developed countries such as the United States, more than one person in nine (11.3%) fell below the official poverty line in 2000. If current practices continue, one half of the world's population will live in absolute poverty by 2050, meaning too poor to grow or buy enough food, or maintain a job.

The introduction of digital technology has presented customers with ① transparency and new ways to search for information about products. Consumers are increasingly relying on online reviews on the internet or "word of mouth" from friends. The change in consumer behavior has likewise presented firms with a new way to ② connect with its customer base. Firms that are the most effective at connecting information regarding the customer's path to purchase (supporting the buying process) are able to position themselves ③ strongly in the future market. Several large organizations have realized that competitive advantage is no longer derived from low cost or product differentiation. Instead, competitive advantage is gained and sustained through a platform offering a system of connected and complementary products that ④ lower consumer's switching costs through strong network effects, meaning the higher the value of the platform is, the more people use it. Network effects and knowledge of customer behavior and needs provide the driving force ⑤ behind any successful organization and platform, together with a demand-driven approach (what will customers want and why?).

Adapted to life in the icy environment in the Antarctic Ocean, where their bodies are at the same glacial temperature as the seas around them, krill are reliant on an unusual internal chemistry. Our own enzyme processes, and those of most other animals, slow down dramatically as the temperature drops. Krill enzymes, though, have some extreme working conditions to cope with, and consequently, they've evolved to be superpowerful. Scientific advances on this scale are rare. When they do occur, it's amazing how often they emerge in the most unlikely circumstances, from research into what might be regarded as _____ animals. Cultural values are ① fundamental within a workplace because they define the terms of the psychological contracts that an employee holds with the organization. Unlike formal contracts of employment, psychological contracts are unwritten, often unarticulated, and usually only exist as ② assumptions. In a culturally homogeneous setting, assumptions are generally understood and shared, so the psychological contracts in play may be relatively ③ unclear: rewards are dependent on how well you do, the employee expects to stay in the organization for many years or for just a few years, the corporate ethos reflects the ethos of that ④ particular society, and so on. However, in a culturally diverse workforce people may have very different expectations of the psychological contract. For example, in some cultures an organization may reward people because of their family connections rather than on the basis of their performance, or, in the case of transnational corporations, the overall corporate ethos is very ⑤ different to that of the host nation.

Test 3 24~25번

In his endlessly amusing book, A Mathematician Plays the Stock Market, John Allen Paulos points out that we tend to misunderstand the role chance plays in the outcomes of apparently even games. Imagine that two people — I will call them George Soros and George Bozos — flip a fair coin 1,000 times each, competing to see who can come up with the most heads. We tend to imagine that, after that many flips, the outcome would almost always come out very even, with Soros and Bozos each getting about 500 heads and 500 tails. We infer from that conclusion that if one of the players actually ends up well ahead of the other, that outcome must be due either to an unfair coin or to the special skill of one of the players.

In fact, as Paulos points out, there is a far greater probability that after 1,000 fair coin flips, Soros or Bozos would be well ahead of the other, having flipped 525 heads to, say, 475 heads. We might call this the law of small numbers; that is, 1,000 flips may seem like a lot, but actually it's not enough observations to ensure that Soros and Bozos will come out even. Thus, if 10,000 people all flipped a fair coin 1,000 times, the aggregate results would tend to be that a goodly number would end up with pretty good records and an equal number would end up with pretty sorry records. A very few would have spectacular records and a very few would have abysmal records. Far less than we might expect would have even records.

*aggregate 합계의 abysmal 최악의

Once, a girl in my class called Emma decided to do a research paper on a particular political group. Her father was an active member of the group, as she herself was soon to become, so this major research paper of hers was a rite of passage as well. Perhaps because I was so ① enthusiastic over her choice of a topic, she assumed I was also sympathetic to her political point of view. Almost conspiratorially she expressed to me her worries about a history teacher who would also be reading her paper and giving it a grade.

“Ms. Maples is quite open about her political views, and hers differ from my father’s, I am ② worried how she’ll mark my paper,” she said. I assured her that Ms. Maples would insist, as I would, on an objective presentation of factual material and on sources other than publications of the political group in question, but that our insistence did not in any way imply a prejudice against her or her work. “As far as politics go,” I told her, “mine are probably similar to those of Ms. Maples’, and look how excited I am about your paper.”

I had meant to put her at ease, but my mistake was immediately ③ evident from the blood leaving her face. I smiled with great kindness. “It’s going to be a wonderful paper,” I said. It’s going to be the end of my life, Emma thought. As to the final outcome, it was a wonderful paper, and working on it with her was the beginning of one of the warmest relationships I ever enjoyed with a student. I tried not only to help her see ④ same points of view, but also to give depth to her own.

To achieve that, I introduced her to the novels of Ayn Rand and a few other books. What I saw in this girl was the ability to believe in something ⑤ more than survival, gratification, and success. It was her having some conviction, aside from any content of the conviction itself, that I strove to reinforce. I think it was Toynbee who said that the values of Sparta and Valhalla are preferable to no values at all. And a misfired challenge to the young may be preferable to allowing their need for challenge and commitment to go unmet.
